SECRET MEMO ON GENEVA GIVES ISRAEL VETO ON PARTICIPANTS

By WOLF BLITZER,
Jerusalem Post Correspondent

WASHINGTON. — The U.S. and Israel signed a secret "memorandum of agreement" regarding the future reconvening of the Geneva Middle East peace conference which specifically guarantees Israel that "additional participants" at the conference will be subject to the agreement of "all the initial participants," a reliable source who has seen the document told The Jerusalem Post yesterday.

This U.S. commitment gives Israel practical veto power over inviting the PLO to the conference, crucial to Israel since it has repeatedly stressed that it will not negotiate with the PLO.

The Geneva memorandum is a separate bilateral agreement between the U.S. and Israel, and is not included in the other secret agreement published in the "Washington Post" yesterday.

Although the existence of this agreement had been known, very few of its sections have previously been published. The agreement was signed on September 1 by Foreign Minister Allon and Secretary of State Kissinger.

The agreement is also considered important by Israel because the eventual reconvening of the conference is taken as an established fact. Under-Secretary of State Joseph Sisco said last week on NBC's "Today Show" that the U.S. does not "even preclude the possibility of a Geneva conference before the end of the year."

The U.S.-Israeli agreement on Geneva also states that:

- The timing of the conference "shall be coordinated" between the governments of Israel and the United States.
- The U.S. "will not recognize nor negotiate" with the PLO as long as the PLO does not recognize Israel's right to exist and Security Council resolutions 242 and 338.

Regarding policy toward the PLO, the U.S. also promises that it "will seek to concert" its position at the Geneva conference with Israel.

- The U.S. "will make every effort" to see that negotiations at the Geneva conference "will be on a bilateral basis" between Israel and individual Arab states.
- The U.S. will vote against and oppose all UN Security Council resolutions which attempt to change the "terms of reference" of the Geneva conference or Security Council resolutions 242 or 338 "in ways incompatible" with their original purpose.

Informed diplomatic sources confirmed yesterday that if Kissinger is unable to get substantive negotiations between Israel and Syria off the ground within the next few months, a reconvened Geneva conference is likely to take place by the end of this year or early next year.

The U.S. commitment to attempt to make certain that negotiations at Geneva are on a bilateral basis is seen here as opening the way for the creation of several working groups at Geneva that will discuss individual problems. Israeli officials have always attempted to fragment the Arab-Israeli dispute into separate problem areas, fearing a certain stalemate if the problem is taken up as a whole.

Phalangist warning

Truce in Beirut declared

By ANAN SAFADI
POST Middle East Affairs Correspondent

Lebanon's influential Christian leader Pierre Jemayyel last night threatened to unleash the full force of his Western-equipped Phalangist militia unless the government used its military power to end the country's sectarian warfare which yesterday spread from the north to the suburban Beirut.

Jemayyel gave the government an ultimatum to remove from Beirut's suburban streets all armed men and saboteurs," whose strength in the Lebanese capital was seen to be consolidated by leftist-oriented Moslem militiamen and radical groups belonging to the Palestine Liberation Organization.

Late last night, the government announced a cease-fire between warring militias, and that streets will be policed by joint patrols of internal security forces and Palestinian terrorists. A government spokesman said the cease-fire went into effect at 10 p.m. and generally appeared to be holding with only scattered shooting reported following day-long mortar and machinegun battles that claimed the lives of at least 10 persons.

Jemayyel had earlier in the day conferred with President Suleiman Frangieh and Interior Minister Camille Chamoun — themselves prominent Christians — on what was termed as the deteriorating situation in Beirut itself.

Meanwhile, deadly fighting in northern Tripoli continued yesterday for the second week running despite the intervention of the army which over the weekend took over a buffer zone separating warring Moslems and Christians in Tripoli and the neighbouring towns. According to Beirut reports, the port of Tripoli, Lebanon's second largest city, was now virtually under the control of leftist forces led by Moslem lawyer Farouk Mokaddem.

These dispatches indicated that the slow intervention by the army had not eased the strife — which according to a conservative police estimate yesterday has already claimed over 540 dead. This brings the total of this summer's four rounds of factional violence in Lebanon to some 3,500 killed and wounded.

Socialist leader Kamal Jumblatt yesterday said that the real solution to Lebanon's conflicts lies in the introduction of drastic reforms in the country's political institutions which are governed by an unwritten covenant dividing authority between the various Christian and Moslem denominations on a communal basis, with the Christian Maronites maintaining the key positions.

Jumblatt, who had earlier this week backed down on a call for a nationwide strike to protest the government's decision to put the army into action in the war-torn northern region, yesterday issued his first appeal to "all combattants to stop the bloodshed and massacres," which he said were alien to the spirit and traditions of Lebanon.

VIP treatment for terrorists in Algiers

ALGIERS. — Four young Palestinian terrorists who seized the Egyptian Embassy in Madrid and demanded that Egypt repudiate its Sinai agreement with Israel were given what amounted to an official welcome by Algerian authorities yesterday.

After arriving here on a special Algerian military plane and freeing their hostages, the four were greeted in the VIP lounge normally reserved for heads of state. There they were given fruit juice and welcomed by Abou Khalil, the Palestine Liberation Organization's representative here. The terrorists claimed, however, they did not belong to any recognized Palestinian group.

Their spokesman, identified only as Abu Issa, told a news conference they were all students. They hid their faces with stocking masks to prevent themselves being photographed, but uncovered their faces when Algerian security men ordered photographers away from the lounge.

The Algerians agreed to fly the terrorists here after Egypt gave its approval. Abdel Ghaffar, Egypt's Ambassador in Madrid, said the action "conforms to the traditions

House unit meets on Hawks today

WASHINGTON (UPI). — Despite threats from King Hussein and verbal assurances from Secretary of State Kissinger, Congressional critics are moving to torpedo the Administration's planned sale to Jordan of $350m. in weapons, including sophisticated Hawk anti-aircraft missiles.

If the opponents succeed in preventing the sale, they will have unleashed the second major confrontation with the White House over arms sales since Congress imposed an embargo on February 5 on weapons deliveries to Turkey.

Congressional sources said that a key critic of the sale, Rep. Jonathan Bingham, Democrat-New York, remains unconvinced by Kissinger's verbal assurances that Jordan would use the Hawk missiles for defensive purposes only.

Bingham now plans to seek a "resolution of disapproval" of the sale when the House of Representatives International Relations Committee meets today the sources said.

Bingham said on Monday after breaking off compromise efforts with Kissinger, "The Administration is unwilling to make any changes in the proposed sale of Hawk missiles to Jordan which would reduce their awesome destabilizing offensive capability. Assurances to the Congress from the State Department based on King Hussein's promise that the Hawk will only be used defensively are inadequate, and that's all they're offering."

The sources said in any case the vote in both Congressional bodies on the sale of 14 batteries of Hawk missiles, Redeye shoulder-fired anti-aircraft missiles and Vulcan anti-aircraft guns, was likely to be close.

The opponents of the sale fear that the sophisticated Hawks, which have a limited offensive capability because of their slant range of 35 kms. could be turned against Israel under the newly-created Jordan-Syrian joint military command.

Neither Bingham nor Case oppose the sale of all anti-aircraft equipment to Jordan. But they contend that Jordan's request for 14 Hawk batteries is excessive.

Luxembourg P. M. elected president of UN Assembly

UNITED NATIONS (AP). — Prime Minister Gaston Thorn of Luxembourg was elected yesterday as president of the newly-convened 30th UN General Assembly.

Thorn, 47, received 135 votes. Ambassadors Jamil Baroody of Saudi Arabia and Radha Krishna Ramphul of Mauritius each got one vote.

Thorn was picked by the West European countries whose turn it was to nominate the president under the UN rotation system. He succeeded Abdelaziz Bouteflika of Algeria who presided over both the 1974 regular assembly and a 17-day economic special session that concluded earlier yesterday with a unanimous declaration. (Story on page 5).

Thorn's election and enlargement of the world organization from 138 to 141 nations were the first orders of business at the new assembly. Newly independent Papua-New Guinea yesterday submitted the application for membership as well.

South African delegates, suspended by the 1974 assembly because of their country's racial policies, did not appear. If they had, the Assembly likely would have voted again to oust them.

"The chances of our participating at all (in the three-month session) are quite slim at the moment," a spokesman for the South African delegation said.

Canadian M.P.s on study tour

Ten members of the Canadian Parliament's Foreign Affairs and Security Committee arrived yesterday for a week's study tour.

During the current recess of parliament in Ottawa, the delegation visited the United States and several European countries en route to Israel, but has no plans to visit any of the Arab countries. The delegation, led by committee chairman, Hugh Andersen, Liberal, counts among its participants two past ministers, Dr. Stanley Haidasz and Robert Stanbury, also Liberal.

Sukhoi dies

MOSCOW (UPI). — Pavel Osipovich Sukhoi, a veteran designer of Soviet military aircraft, died Monday, Tass news agency said yesterday. He was 80.

A team under his direction designed several military aircraft before World War II, the most notable being the SU-2 short-range bomber that became a mainstay for the Soviet Air Force during the war.

Pershings on Israel arms list, Ford says

By WOLF BLITZER
Jerusalem Post Correspondent

WASHINGTON. — The U.S. has agreed to hold "an early meeting" with Israel to "undertake a joint study of high technology and sophisticated (military) items, including the Pershing ground-to-ground missiles with conventional warheads, with the view to giving a positive response."

This previously undisclosed U.S. commitment to Israel was made public yesterday by syndicated columnist Jack Anderson and the "Washington Post." It was contained in a secret addendum on arms assistance to Israel that accompanied the Israeli-Egyptian interim agreement in Sinai.

President Ford told a news conference yesterday, however, that the statement does not represent a commitment to supply Israel with the Pershing and other sophisticated equipment, including the advanced F-16 fighter plane. "The announcement concerning the F-16 and the Pershing missile — those are not firm commitments," Ford said. "They do involve negotiation between the United States and Israel. They are on a shopping list and will be discussed with representatives of the Israel Government," he added.

The Pershing missile has an approximately 740-kms. range, and is considered much more advanced than the Lance surface-to-surface missile. Defence Minister Shimon Peres, who arrived in New York yesterday and begins talks with Secretary of State Kissinger today on Israel arms requests, will attempt to get specific contracts with the U.S. on these and other military items.

(Mr. Peres is accompanied by Air Force commander Aluf Binyamin Peled, the army intelligence chief, Aluf Shlomo Gazit, and Defence Ministry director-general Yitzhak Ironi.)

Anderson said that the Pershing missile is "designed to hurl nuclear warheads," although the addendum stipulates that the U.S. will not provide nuclear warheads to Israel. Commented Anderson: "The implication, according to our sources, is that the Israelis will be able to attach their own nuclear warheads."

Text of U.S.-Israel memorandum of agreement on P. 3.

In addition to revealing the text of the addendum, Anderson and the "Washington Post" also published the text of the U.S.-Israeli memorandum of agreement that was attached to the Israeli-Egyptian Sinai agreement. Secret portions of the U.S.-Israeli agreement had been leaked, but not the full text.

The publication of the hitherto secret document took the State Department by surprise. Kissinger has said that all of the U.S. commitments and undertakings that were included in the agreement would eventually become public.

Informed sources here confirmed that no specific U.S. commitment to Israel regarding the missiles and the aircraft were made since the exact working of the document is in general terms, merely promising that the U.S. will hold a joint study with Israel on them.

Israeli officials are known to have attempted during the Kissinger shuttle to pin down the Administration to specific quantities and dates of deliveries for the arms shipments, but Kissinger said that these would have to be negotiated separately at a later date.

Peres is coming to Washington with a lengthy shopping list of military hardware needs, including tanks, armoured personnel carriers, Lance and Pershing missiles, sophisticated "smart" bombs of the laser- and television-guided variety, helicopters and jet fighters.

Shot fired into Israel Embassy annex in U.S.

Jerusalem Post Correspondent

WASHINGTON. — Police here are investigating the mysterious firing of a shot over the weekend into an office window at the Israel Embassy's annex.

Embassy personnel discovered the bullet hole at the embassy's annex Sunday morning. The annex is located on the sixth floor of the Congressional Quarterly building in northwest Washington. Although Israel maintains a separate chancery two blocks away, the increased staffing of the embassy forced Israel to rent additional office space last year.

Police and embassy officials are uncertain whether the shot — and they indicated yesterday that there could have been more than one — had any political significance or was merely stray shooting. The firing took place sometime between late Saturday night and Sunday morning. The offices were empty and no one was injured.

Dr. K says U.S. will encourage Syria talks

Jerusalem Post Correspondent

WASHINGTON. — Secretary of State Henry Kissinger said yesterday that the United States "will seriously encourage a negotiation between Syria and Israel."

In a speech prepared for delivery last night in Cincinnati, Ohio, Kissinger warned that "there can be no stagnation for the area remains tense and volatile."

Kissinger's remarks appear to be his strongest public statements to date regarding the need to continue negotiations between Israel and Arab states. In a secret agreement with Egypt, the U.S. said that it would make "a serious effort" to get Israeli-Syrian negotiations off the ground.

"For our part, we stand ready to assist as the parties desire," Kissinger said, adding that the U.S. is "prepared to consult all countries concerned, including the Soviet Union, about the timing and substance of a reconvened Geneva conference."

American and Israeli officials are said to be in agreement that Kissinger should at least attempt to get a Syrian-Israeli negotiation going, despite the difficulties involved. If it appears that this is impossible, the U.S. is expected to call for a Geneva reconvening.

Kissinger is expected to initiate diplomatic feelers with Syria later this month to determine the possibilities. Israel, while not ruling out negotiations with Syria, says that there is room for only minor territorial adjustments along the Golan front within the framework of interim negotiations. The Secre-

Knesset session today on Golan talks

Jerusalem Post Diplomatic Correspondent

The government is expected to use today's special Knesset session in a further attempt to stem speculation over imminent Israel-Syria interim negotiations. Foreign Minister Yigal Allon, who will reply to the Likud's motion, will not rule out entirely the prospect of such talks in the future — but he will emphasize that Israel does not consider them imminent and that speculation, and statements by Egyptian Foreign Minister Fahmy, are therefore premature.

The Likud opposition called for the special session in the wake of statements by Fahmy predicting Israel-Syria talks before the end of next month.

A Cabinet statement issued last week stressed Israel's preference for a one-step overall settlement on the Golan, but did not totally rule out interim talks. It said there was no Cabinet decision on interim talks.

The Likud is expected to press for a clear statement by the Foreign Minister opposing interim talks — but Mr. Allon is likely to remain vague on this point.

The government's basic policy is to defer active consideration of possible Golan interim talks until the Sinai agreement is fully and smoothly implemented. The government's attitude will also be shaped by Syria's actions in advance of the November 30 UNDOF mandate expiry date.

The Golan issue was raised again briefly at yesterday's Cabinet meeting, in the course of a general review of the political situation by the Prime Minister.

Reporting on the military protocol talks with Egypt at Geneva, Mr. Rabin is understood to have expressed general satisfaction with their pace and progress. No unexpected or insurmountable difficulties had been encountered. The tough bargaining over the number of Egyptian policemen to be allowed in the coastal strip to Abu Rodeis had been anticipated, informed sources said.

The official Cabinet communique added:

Sitting as a ministerial defence committee, the Cabinet was briefed on matters relating to military aid from the United States and connected with the Defence Minister's visit to Washington.

Youth killed in stolen car; Uzzis found

GEDERA. — A young man was killed and two others injured when the stolen car they were travelling in was involved in a collision on the Nachshon-Masmiya road on Monday night. The car, a Cortina, was found to contain three Uzi submachineguns and a quantity of ammunition.

The two persons hurt managed to make their own way to the Kaplan Hospital. They claimed to have no knowledge of the man who was killed, telling police questioners that they had merely been hitch-hiking. The car had been stolen from Herzliya.

As of last night, police had not yet succeeded in identifying the dead man.

Meshel hits ministers for evading tax

Jerusalem Post Reporter

TEL AVIV. — Histadrut Secretary-General Yeruham Meshel last night implicity criticized cabinet ministers for seeking special income tax arrangements for themselves. (M.K. protests — page 3).

One of the aims of the Ben-Shahar reform was to compel people to pay income tax on all their earnings. Meshel told the central committee here special arrangements for power groups undermined the reform.

The Secretary-General was not specific in his criticism of the Ministers or the arrangements sought for the Regular Army, but an aide explained he meant exactly that as well as the fact no serious effort was underway to fully tax the self-employed.

Meshel also indicated that the Government was by-passing a special committee it had set up with the employers and the Histadrut to check on the implementation of the tax reform.

The Secretary-General added that the Histadrut will initiate meetings with ministers dealing with economic affairs to formulate a general economic policy tackling the problems of wages, prices, taxation and employment.

He said the Value Added Tax should be discussed in the context of all other economic measures. Members of the Histadrut central committee were apparently split over VAT.

Zvi Wolf of the Independent Liberals, supporting VAT, said it was about time the Histadrut considered the Government's problems of closing a IL5,000m. deficit in the budget and a growing gap in the balance of trade.

Naftali Ben-Moshe, of Mapam, reportedly opposed VAT.

Allon wants 'charter' for reform

Jerusalem Post Reporter

HAIFA. — Foreign Minister Yigal Allon said here last night that more than foreign policy, the internal economic, social and cultural situation and the decline in public morals caused him grave concern. He proposed that the Government, Histadrut and private sector work out a "charter that would enable us to carry out urgently needed economic reforms and reorganization."

He went on to say that American workers need not fear that U.S. aid to Israel would cost them their jobs. Most of the money would pay for sophisticated weapons made in the U.S. and would not reach Israel at all, he told a local Labour Party meeting.

Generous as it was, the aid would not be enough for the investment Israel now needs to develop water, electricity and farming resources, especially in the Negev and the Galilee. "The Israel public will have to shoulder this burden," Allon said.

Allon said the situation in Lebanon was a good example of what we can expect from the "secular democratic state" the PLO wants in Israel.

You have to know a thing or two when you seek Succot symbols

These experts all agree, after meticulous examination, in a Jerusalem market yesterday, that they should look further for their palm branches for Succot; the tip of this one is not firm enough and may come apart when shaken during the holiday. (Rahamim Israeli)

By JUDY SIEGEL
Jerusalem Post Reporter

TAKE A PALM branch that's as straight as an arrow, two willow branches and three myrtle sprigs whose leaves form clusters of three from top to bottom, and put them in a holder of plaited palm leaves. Add a yellow-green citron that is symmetrical and flawless — and shake them all together.

That's the recipe for observing the commandment of lulav (palm branch) and etrog (citron) on Succot — and the more careful you are in buying the ingredients, the better. If you purchase them in Jerusalem's Mea Shearim quarter, it's advisable to take a crash course in Halacha, and if possible attend an ulpan in Yiddish, or you may end up with a lemon instead of a citron.

In the days between Yom Kippur and Succot, the quarter turns into a marketplace of the "four species," with free-lance vendors displaying their produce on sidewalk stands (usually the cheaper, inferior stuff) and Hebrew booksellers uncovering their "most perfect etrog" in the darkest recesses of their shop. Competition is stiff, with prices fluctuating according to supply and demand as on Lilienblum. "Dos is a guter esrig," promises Avremele the bookseller, unwrapping one from a skein of flax, "a real tzatzkele!"

The cheapest hadassim (myrtle sprigs) go for IL3 to IL5, while the most perfect, examined leaf-by-leaf with a magnifying glass, sell at IL25 or so. The experienced lulav purchaser holds it to his eye as if he were aiming a gun, unwilling to settle for anything less than a straight-spined frond (costing about IL6 to IL20). But it's the etrog that separates the tightwad from the devout Jew who spares no expense to observe the mitzva. These flawless beauties cost up to IL200 at Avremele's. "But for a Jew who doesn't understand what an etrog is, it's a shame to sell him the best."

The poor, he continues, usually save up for months to buy the most beautiful etrog, Avremele continues. "For them, money is important only if it goes for a mitzva. The rich quibble over whether to spend IL4 or IL5 for hadassim."

Customers disagree on what makes the most beautiful etrog, according to their background. Some insist it have a pittam (the pistil on top that must not be broken), while others say a pittam-less etrog is less likely to have been grafted (considered unfit by most rabbis). Some prefer an indented ring around the middle, while Sephardim and more especially Yemenites, compete for the biggest citrons available (the Talmud describes etrogim big enough to be carried on the shoulders).

When Succot is over, you can weave the lulav leaves into mats or lulav holders, or burn them in the fire used for baking Pessah matzot. The etrog can be stuck with cloves and dried for a pomander, pickled or jellied with sugar, or its peel made into a snake-bite antidote (see Tractate Shabbat 109B).

And many of the vendors — who earn enough money from the holiday — will return to their books and study the rest of the year.

Sara Honig adds from Tel Aviv:

The large yard of the former Magistrates' Court in Rehov Yehuda Halevi was bristling with activity yesterday as thousands flock to buy the "four species." Many stands featured decorations for the Succot booths — traditional chains and other shapes of colourful paper, shiny tinsel and pictures of the Sages.

Municipal employees have been pruning trees to provide free foliage in an effort to prevent despoiling of the trees. Persons caught chopping or slashing tree branches in public gardens, parks or groves will be prosecuted. There are a number of foliage distribution centres around town and their locations are listed on city bulletin boards.

Jewish leader in Bonn accused of war crime

Jerusalem Post Correspondent

BONN. — The Hanover public prosecutor is investigating a charge that the city's Jewish community leader, Dr. Leon Feiler, 60, helped kill a fellow prisoner in a Nazi concentration camp.

The charges were made by Heinrich Wexler, 64, now on trial for the alleged murder of several inmates at the wartime Neuengamme camp near here.

Wexler claimed Dr. Feiler, who worked at the camp hospital and is now a witness for the prosecution, gave a fatal petrol injection to another inmate. Dr. Feiler denied the charge, saying he provided medicine to the prisoner in question.

The prosecutor's office says it has no evidence against Dr. Feiler, other than Wexler's allegations, but under German law it must launch a routine probe.

HAIFA. — A "summer visitor" from the Lebanon, reluctant to return home because of the fighting there, has been given permission to stay in Israel, it was learned yesterday. The man, whose name was not disclosed, came to Israel several weeks ago and shortly before he was due to return appealed for permission to stay.

He said that he would "rather eat bread and olives in Israel" than return. He has found temporary employment with a travel agency.

F.A. delays talks on soccer league

By PAUL KOHN
Jerusalem Post Sports Reporter

TEL AVIV. — The general meeting of the Israel Football Association yesterday elected a new management but postponed debate on Education Minister Aharon Yadlin's recommendations for a new structure to Israel soccer.

A special general meeting on September 29 will discuss Mr. Yadlin's plan to open the season with 18 teams in the National League and relegate six teams at the end of the year. The proposals are strongly opposed by a sizable part of Hapoel, but Maccabi and Betar have come out in favour.

Micha Almog, 51, of Hapoel and deputy mayor of Kfar Saba, was elected as chairman for the next two years, replacing Menahem Heller, managing director of Shikun Ovdim, who has been with the F.A. for 25 years.

However, a president was not chosen, as Aharon Yariv M.K. declined the post. It is understood the Education Minister will put forward a new name.

The 20 member F.A. management was elected yesterday. They will be joined by a representative of the Government Sports Authority, Dr. Gilad Weingarten, and two as yet unnamed appointees of the minister of education.

Ministers condemn 'sensational' newscasts

Jerusalem Post Reporter

ISRAEL RADIO and Television report the news with a sensationalist eye, according to the general opinion in the Cabinet.

At the first part of a discussion on the Broadcasting Authority, held at yesterday's Cabinet session, all the Ministers who took part found plenty to criticise in the way that radio and television reporters had covered the news over the past year. Almost all of them conceded at the same time that some improvement had taken place.

The universal opinion was that the Government emerged at a disadvantage, as mirrored in Shidurei Israel. Marginal and secondary issues got the highlight, Ministers complained. The actions of small groups of demonstrators were magnified out of all proportion, they said.

While everyone charged a lack of equilibrium in the news coverage, not all the Ministers agreed that the imbalance went the same way. Some claimed that the news was given a rightist and pro-religious slant. Others charged that the secularist view dominated.

The Cabinet had two memoranda before it as a basis for discussion: one from Education Minister Aharon Yadlin, who has parliamentary responsibility for the Broadcasting Authority; the second from Authority director-general Yitzhak Livni. Yadlin kicked off the discussion. Nine Ministers took part, and several more hope to speak in the coming session. Livni will reply then in detail to Ministers' comments and suggestions.

Most Ministers took a jaundiced view of the Authority's demand for new investment in equipment and expansion in programming.

Experts see long wait for water from sea

There will be no appreciable desalination of sea water to alleviate water shortages before 1985, Reuven Eiland, director-general of the Agriculture Ministry, told a group of regional directors and hydrolics experts meeting in Netanya yesterday.

Mr. Eiland said he was basing the bleak prognosis on reports from American and European experts. Any additional water would have to come from sewage recycling, he said.

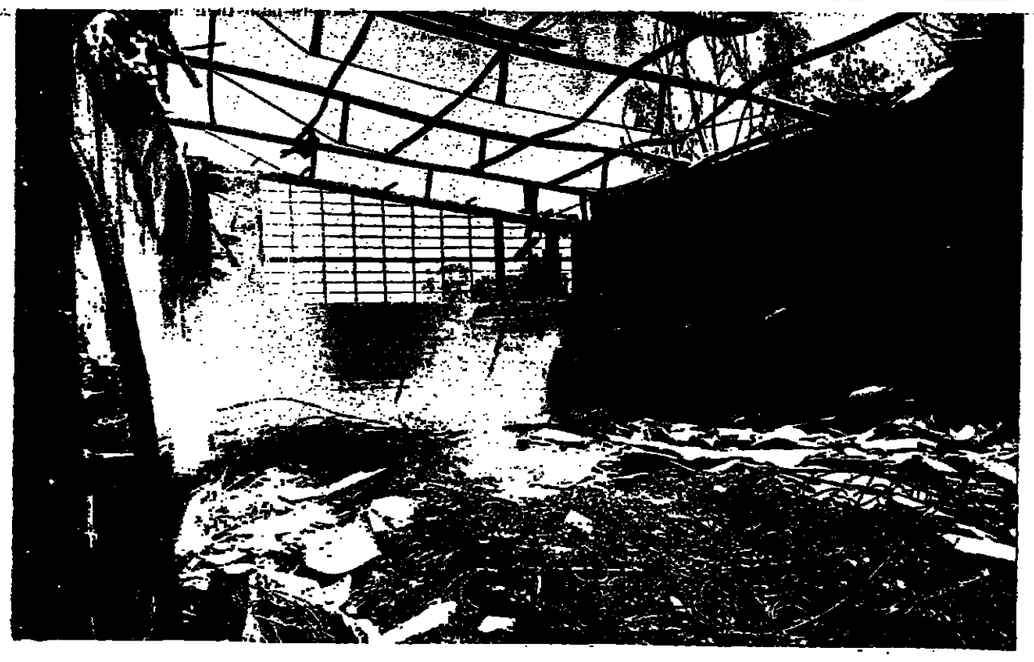

Meanwhile, the director-general noted, Israel is already using all available natural water sources. With regard to ground water, he said, the country may even be using more than the permissible limit.

T.A. to crack down on untidy builders

Jerusalem Post Reporter

TEL AVIV. — Building contractors here will be required to deposit IL30,000 as a guarantee that they will remove all rubble from construction sites, according to a byelaw passed here recently. It will be implemented in a few months.

The contractor will get the deposit back only when municipal inspectors are satisfied that all the debris has been carted away. Reporting this at a meeting of Sanitation Department workers, Municipal Councillor Arye Kremmer said 500 tons of assorted junk had been collected in a holiday season clean-up during the past fortnight.

PARADISE LOSS — Only the smouldering springs remain of IL250,000 worth of mattresses which went up in flames yesterday at the Paradise mattress factory in Tel Aviv. The fire was apparently caused by a short circuit in the electrical system.

Kissinger on Syria

tary is scheduled to meet later this month with Syrian Foreign Minister Khaddem, who is due to attend the opening session of the UN General Assembly.

"The path ahead will be difficult," Kissinger said last night. He said that following Congressional endorsement of the Administration's proposal to dispatch American civilian technicians to Sinai, "we will start our consultations with all concerned to assure that there is consensus on the next step. We will not move precipitously, because we want confidence to build. We will not move without careful preparation, because we want the process to continue to succeed."

Kissinger also stressed in the speech the importance of providing Israel and Egypt with needed foreign aid, noting that even if an interim agreement had not been achieved, the U.S. would have had to provide nearly as much aid as it would request the Congress to approve now.

During a press conference yesterday morning in Orlando, Florida, Kissinger said that the aid figure for Israel would total between 2.2 to 2.3 billion dollars. He did not say how much of that figure would be for military equipment, but informed sources here expect the military aid request to be about 1.6 billion dollars of that.

"Indeed," Kissinger said, "most of the assistance we shall request would have been sought even if there were no agreement. But in the present context our aid takes on new significance. It is central to our policy and vital to the chances for a lasting peace in the Middle East."

He added: "In short, what we have proposed to the Congress and the American people is not an engagement in war, but an investment in peace."

Without an agreement, the chances of another war in the Middle East would have increased greatly, Kissinger said, adding that under those circumstances the cost to the American taxpayer would be even higher. He noted that the Arab oil embargo that accompanied the Yom Kippur War cost Americans half a million jobs and over 10 billion dollars in national output. He said the embargo added "at least five percentage points to the price index, contributing to the worst inflation since World War II."

Kissinger praised both President Sadat and Prime Minister Rabin for having the political courage to make the concessions needed for the Sinai agreement.

"The achievement owes much to the courage of leaders on both sides," Kissinger said. "President Sadat and his government moved Egypt on the path of moderation and development. They have understood that a political process offered the only realistic hope for the achievement of all Arab interests."

Kissinger added that "credit is due equally to Prime Minister Rabin and the Government of Israel ... Israel's leaders realized that only negotiation offered a hope to achieve what Israel has sought for 27 years — new political conditions that would mean acceptance by its neighbours, in return for withdrawal from territory. They had the wisdom to recognize that the time had come to start this difficult, even painful process."

On other issues Kissinger said:

- The Rabat Arab summit conference "made negotiations over the West Bank impossible." He was referring to the conference's decision to have the PLO and not Jordan represent the West Bank.
- King Khaled of Saudi Arabia is continuing the policy of "the highly respected late King Faisal."
- The American people, the Congress and the Administration "are, to an extraordinary degree, united on the course of our Middle East policy." Kissinger said that "this is why we will not cease our effort."
- "The next Middle East war will pose greater risks, complexities and dangers and cause more dislocations than any previous conflict," Kissinger said.

The ambassador and two of his aides were held hostage when the embassy was seized on Monday. They were released upon landing here, as were the Iraqi and Algerian ambassadors in Madrid, who served as mediators.

The reception given the terrorists here was an indication that Algeria, although it disapproved of their methods, supported their goals.

Abu Issa said the purpose of the operation "was to alert Arab and international public opinion on the dangers represented by the agreement for the Arab and Palestinian causes."

He said he and his comrades agreed to meet in Madrid, but did not say where they came from. One of the terrorists, in a phone call with a reporter in Madrid, was heard to speak fluent Spanish.

"Despite our firm determination to carry off the operation, we were certain the Egyptian government would reject our demands," Abu Issa said. The gunmen, he added, had agreed on Algeria as a place of refuge before seizing the Egyptian embassy. "This choice was motivated by the dignified and revolutionary position of Algeria toward the Palestinian cause," Abu Issa said.

In Cairo, Egyptian ambassador Abdel Ghaffar said yesterday that Palestinian leader Yasser Arafat, whom Egypt held responsible for the operation, was instrumental in ending the seizure of the Egyptian Embassy in Madrid.

The Egyptian news agency, Mena, quoted the 55-year-old diplomat as saying that "Arafat's message to the gunmen was quite effective in ending their seizure of the Embassy."

The message was carried by a representative of the PLO in Madrid. "After hearing it, the five gunmen moved into another room in the embassy where they consulted each other," the ambassador said.

"It became clear later that the message was very effective," he added.

The ambassador said, according to Mena, that the message "denounced the action and called on the gunmen to release the hostages immediately."

It added, he said, "that neither the PLO nor the Palestinians could do without Egypt."

The Egyptian Ambassador was due to return last night to Madrid, where he is to present his credentials this week.

Oil experts join Geneva talks

By EHUD YAARI
Special to the Jerusalem Post and Davar

GENEVA. — Technical questions concerning the Abu Rodeis oil installations were discussed at yesterday's session of the Israel-Egypt talks here on the implementation of the Sinai agreement. Israel and Egyptian oil experts joined the negotiating teams for the talks.

Representing Israel was Michael Kish of Netivei Neft, which has been operating the oilfields. Details had earlier been discussed outside Geneva with the participation of representatives of the Italian state-owned oil company Eni, who were partners with Egypt in Abu Rodeis before 1967.

Delegations headed by Egyptian Major-General Taha el Magdoub and Ambassador Mordechai Gazit of Israel began discussions in the morning.

The annex to the interim agreement specifies that "Israel undertakes to leave intact all currently existing civilian installations and infrastructures." This could be interpreted to mean that Israel equipment and installations in the oilfields should be transferred to the Egyptians, and the question of compensation through Eni arises.

The opening of the talks on oil signals resumption of the negotiations over the southern sector. These negotiations were deferred last week in view of substantial differences between the parties, pending new instructions and clarifications from Jerusalem and Cairo and perhaps American intervention.

Security precautions here were markedly tightened yesterday, following the attack on the Egyptian Embassy in Madrid. The Egyptians stopped using black limousines with diplomatic plates, changing them for simple rented cars.

Bar-Lev bemoans lack of investment

Jerusalem Post Economic Correspondent

ISRAEL IS investing half as much in industry (proportionate to total resources) as countries such as Sweden, Holland and Belgium — and that is not enough, according to Haim Bar-Lev, Minister of Commerce and Industry. He was addressing the press in Jerusalem yesterday.

One obstacle is the lack (temporary, he hopes) of cash in the Treasury's coffers for development loans — owing to the policy of budgetary restraint. "We requested IL950m. during the first half of the present fiscal year. The budget authorities granted us IL700m. But demand has already outrun this figure by IL100m. and the — extra money is not forthcoming."

The remedy is to seek out more foreign investors — and Bar-Lev is leaving for the U.S. shortly, partly to do that.

Also, loan conditions have been tightened. The Government will not give credit for buying land in the central part of the country, even to approved enterprises. (Such enterprises will still get credit in the development areas.)

It has also published a detailed list of industries which will not rate Government loans for acquiring factory space either. "Loans in these branches will be only for the purchase of machinery and equipment," he said.

A plan has been prepared to supply the 10,000 additional workers that industry needs. Mr. Bar-Lev pointed out that production in the building-materials industry fell by one-fifth in January-August, and workers are being dismissed in this branch. It is important to limit non-industrial investment so that growth can be concentrated in the manufacturing sector.

Questioned about the new construction work that will be needed now that the Israeli forces are withdrawing to new positions in Sinai, Bar-Lev stated that less elaborate fortifications will be required. Outlay should be less than IL1,000m. Some of this cash is already provided under the existing budget. (It was intended for modifications in the old line.)

He added that the building work will be done as far as possible by the Army (which will call up reservists for the purpose) and the Public Works Department — to avoid the big profits made five years ago by private contractors on the Bar-Lev line.

The Minister will spend a fortnight in the U.S., partly to hold talks with the American authorities on trade and economic cooperation. He will take the opportunity of visiting an atomic power station, he said.

U.S. pledge of diplomatic, arms support

The following is the text of the memorandum of agreement between the United States and Israel, which, according to diplomatic sources, quoted by the Washington Post's Jack Anderson, was signed by Secretary of State Henry Kissinger and Foreign Minister Yigal Allon on September 1:

The United States recognizes that the Egypt-Israel agreement initialled on September 1, 1975 (hereinafter referred to as the agreement), entailing the withdrawal from vital areas in Sinai, constitutes an act of great significance on Israel's part in the pursuit of final peace, that agreement has U.S. support.

UNITED STATES-ISRAEL ASSURANCES

The U.S. Government will make every effort to be fully responsive, within the limits of its resources and Congressional authorization and appropriation, on an on-going long-term basis to Israel's military equipment and other defence requirements, to its energy requirements and to its economic needs. The needs specified in paragraphs 2, 3 and 4 below shall be deemed eligible for inclusion within the annual total to be requested in fiscal year '76 and later fiscal years.

2. Israel's long-term military supply needs from the U.S. shall be the subject of periodic consultations between representatives of the U.S. and Israel defence establishments, with agreement reached on specific items to be included in a separate U.S.-Israel memorandum. To this end, a joint study by military experts will be undertaken within three weeks. In conducting this study, which will include Israel's 1976 needs, the U.S. will view Israel's requests sympathetically, including its request for advanced and sophisticated weapons.

3. Israel will make its own independent arrangements for oil supply to meet its requirements through normal procedures. In the event Israel is unable to secure its needs in this way, the U.S. Government, upon notification of this fact by the Government of Israel, will act as follows for five years, at the end of which period either side can terminate this arrangement on one year's notice.

(A) If the oil Israel needs to meet all its normal requirements for domestic consumption is unavailable for purchase in circumstances where no quantitative restrictions exist on the ability of the U.S. to procure oil to meet its normal requirements, the U.S. Government will promptly make oil available for purchase by Israel to meet all of the aforementioned normal requirements of Israel. If Israel is unable to secure the necessary means to transport such oil to Israel, the U.S. Government will make every effort to help Israel secure the necessary means of transport.

(B) If the oil Israel needs to meet all of Israel's normal requirements for domestic consumption is unavailable for purchase in circumstances where quantitative restrictions through embargo or otherwise also prevent the U.S. from procuring oil to meet normal requirements, the U.S. Government will promptly make oil available for purchase by Israel in accordance with the International Energy Agency conservation and allocation formula as applied by the U.S. Government, in order to meet Israel's essential requirements. If Israel is unable to secure the necessary means to transport such oil to Israel, the U.S. Government will make every effort to help Israel secure the necessary means of transport.

Israel and U.S. experts will meet annually or more frequently at the request of either party, to review Israel's continuing oil requirement.

4. In order to help Israel meet its energy needs, and as part of the overall annual figure in paragraph 1 above, the U.S. agrees:

(A) In determining the overall annual figure which will be requested from Congress, the U.S. Government will give special attention to Israel's oil import requirements and, for a period as determined by article 3 above, will take into account in calculating that figure Israel's additional expenditures for the import of oil to replace that which would have ordinarily come from Abu Rodeis and Ras Sudar (4.5 million tons in 1975).

(B) To ask Congress to make available funds, the amount to be determined by mutual agreement, to the Government of Israel necessary for a project for the construction and stocking of the oil reserves to be stored in Israel, bringing storage reserve capacity and reserve stocks now standing at approximately six months, up to one year's need at the time of the completion of the project. The project will be implemented within four years. The construction, operation and financing and other relevant questions of the project will be the subject of early and detailed talks between the two governments.

A missile with the wings of a dove, symbolizing the arduous road to peace, is the idea behind this sculpture, which will be presented to Secretary of State Henry Kissinger by Defence Minister Shimon Peres in Washington this week. The man behind the work is sculptor Naim Basson who cast the work in pure silver. (IPPA)

5. The U.S. Government will not expect Israel to begin to implement the agreement before Egypt fulfils its undertaking under the January, 1974, disengagement agreement to permit passage of all Israel cargoes to and from Israel ports through the Suez Canal.

6. The U.S. Government agrees with Israel that the next agreement with Egypt should be a final peace agreement.

7. In case of an Egyptian violation of any of the provisions of the agreement, the U.S. Government is prepared to consult with Israel as to the significance of the violation and possible remedial action by the U.S. Government.

8. The U.S. Government will vote against any Security Council resolution which, in its judgement, affects or alters adversely the agreement.

9. The U.S. Government will not join in and will seek to prevent efforts by others to bring about consideration of proposals which it and Israel agree are detrimental to the interests of Israel.

10. In view of the longstanding U.S. commitment to the survival and security of Israel, the U.S. Government will view with particular gravity threats to Israel's security or sovereignty by a world power. In support of this objective, the U.S. Government will in the event of such threat consult promptly with the Government of Israel with respect to what support, diplomatic or otherwise, or assistance it can lend to Israel in accordance with its constitutional practices.

11. The U.S. Government and the Government of Israel will, at the earliest possible time, and if possible, within two months after the signature of this document, conclude the contingency plan for a military supply operation to Israel in an emergency situation.

12. It is the U.S. Government's position that Egyptian commitments under the Egypt-Israel agreement, its implementation, validity and duration are not conditional upon any act or developments between the other Arab States and Israel. The U.S. Government regards the agreement as standing on its own.

13. The U.S. Government shares the Israel position that, under existing political circumstances, negotiations with Jordan will be directed toward an overall peace settlement.

14. In accordance with the principle of freedom of navigation on the high seas and free and unimpeded passage through and over straits connecting international waters, the U.S. Government regards the straits of Bab el-Mandeb and the strait of Gibraltar as international waterways. It will support Israel's right to free and unimpeded passage through such straits. Similarly, the U.S. Government recognizes Israel's right to freedom of flights over the Red Sea and such straits and will support diplomatically the exercise of that right.

15. In the event that the UN Emergency Force or any other UN organ is withdrawn without the prior agreement of both parties to the Egypt-Israel agreement and the U.S. before this agreement is superseded by another agreement, it is the U.S. view that the agreement shall remain binding in all its parts.

16. The U.S. and Israel agree that signature of the protocol of the Egypt-Israel agreement and its full entry into effect shall not take place before approval by the U.S. Congress of the U.S. role in connection with the surveillance and observation functions described in the agreement and its annex. The U.S. has informed the Government of Israel that it has obtained the agreement of the Government of Egypt to the above.

SECRET ADDENDUM ON ARMS ASSISTANCE

Following is the text of the secret addendum to the memorandum of agreement between the U.S. and Israel:

On the question of military and economic assistance to Israel, the following conveyed by the U.S. to Israel augments what the memorandum of agreement states.

The U.S. is resolved to continue to maintain Israel's defensive strength through the supply of advanced types of equipment, such as the F-16 aircraft. The U.S. Government agrees to an early meeting to undertake a joint study of high technology and sophisticated items, including the Pershing ground-to-ground missiles with conventional warheads, with the view to giving a positive response. The U.S. administration will submit annually for approval by the U.S.-Congress a request for military and economic assistance in order to help meet Israel's economic and military needs.

Blue Band sacks its daily workers

By YA'ACOV FRIEDLER
Jerusalem Post Reporter

HAIFA. — The Blue Band-Telma food products plant management yesterday dismissed the 230 striking production workers without severance pay. The dismissal notices were handed to the men, who are daily employees and need not therefore be given notice. The week-long production standstill may soon cause a margarine shortage and has already gravely damaged the plant's export drive.

The management had warned the men that they would be dismissed if they failed to end their week-long wildcat strike by this morning. The Labour Council, which had denounced the strike as having no justification, had also given them a last-minute warning to return to work, or face the dismissals without Histadrut protection. At a meeting in the plant, the men ratified the stand of their leaders against a return, and against signing of an undertaking that they would refrain from unofficial strike action in future.

The men went on strike to demand assurances for increased severance pay for any of them who might be dismissed or who wished to resign because of the recent change of ownership. (A group of German Jewish investors bought the plant's shares from the Rothschild Bank, in London.)

The management had assured them that their severance pay and working conditions would remain the same under the new owners. The Labour Council backed the undertaking but to no avail. The Council rejected any attempt to have the work contract rewritten, as this could have been interpreted as a violation of the wage freeze.

General Manager G. Teitsch said last night that this was the second time the men had gone out on a wildcat strike in six months, and the management now required an undertaking that they would honour their contract. He said that the idea of getting the remaining 400 employees, who are paid monthly, to resume production had "not been seriously considered," and noted that Labour Council Secretary Eliezer Molk had specifically asked them to refrain from such a step.

Blue Band supplies about 80 per cent of the country's margarine and he feared a shortage would soon develop. The firm's million dollar export drive would also be hard hit. "We'll be unable to meet commitments to buyers," he said.

AFULA MARKING JUBILEE

AFULA. — A number of recent immigrants from the Soviet Union whose parents had purchased real estate "near the Afula opera house" half a century ago will really be able to celebrate the town's fiftieth anniversary now that their ownership rights have been recognized.

Addressing a press conference to announce Afula's jubilee celebrations, to take place during Succot, Mayor Shimshon Shehori said that, while the newcomers had not found the opera house the original American settlers of the place had envisioned, the plots they owned were extremely valuable as they were right in the present town centre.

Mayor Shehori exhibited at the press conference a number of documents connected with the early days of this central Galilee town, which now has a population of 21,000. One of them shows that in 1924, a year before its creation, Zvi Lieberman, pioneer and writer of children's tales, wrote to Haim Arlosoroff and Yitzhak Sprinzak suggesting that a "cooperative city" named "Lev Ha'Emek" (The Heart of the Valley) be established.

"Lev Ha'Emek" was to have a flour mill, a printing press and a hospital among its amenities, but the Labour leaders were apparently not over-enthusiastic and did nothing. A little later the American "Zion" community purchased 16,000 dunams of land on which the first settlers built their houses. (Hima...

Carmiel, at 10, issues call for more land

Jerusalem Post Reporter

CARMIEL. — This development township, half-way between Acre and Safed, will mark its first decade during the Succot holiday with an arts fair and hobbies exhibition. Artists from the town and the neighbouring villages will exhibit and sell their works.

At a press conference yesterday, Carmiel Council Chairman Baruch Wanger said that 1,800 apartments were under construction in the town, with another 1,500 to be built during the next two years. Nevertheless, Carmiel, with only 8,000 residents, is still well behind the 20,000 target that had been set for its first decade. Wanger attributed the lag to the "failure by the planning authorities to see realities," lack of sufficient attention by the Government, the changes in priorities brought about by the Six Day War, the economic recession and the reduction in immigration.

However, his town was now ready to "take off" on a new spurt of development, and he noted that 12 industrial plants and 20 workshops were now being planned, with a total investment of IL136m. and 1,160 new jobs.

However, the town sorely needed additional land, as it was already reaching the limits of its 5,300 dunams, and he called for the annexation of another 5,000 dunams owned partly by the Lands Authority and partly by neighbouring Arabs.

Food poisoning danger in Haifa

Jerusalem Post Reporter

HAIFA. — There is a danger of mass food poisoning in Haifa unless the city's veterinary service is expanded. This is stated in a survey of the service commissioned by Mayor Yosef Almogi from the municipal manpower department.

"In view of the limited resources at the disposal of the service, a palpable danger of mass food poisoning, or the transfer of disease from animals exists in Haifa," according to the author of the report, engineer Ilan Peri. He recommends that the service personnel be expanded to 13, as the present eight-man staff is inadequate for the control of 350 food stores and plants in the Haifa area, with its 230,000 residents.

He also recommended greater cooperation between the municipal and governmental veterinary services, more equipment and stricter control over public kitchens.

MK protests tax perk for Ministers

TEL AVIV. — Knesset Member Akiva Nof, of the Likud's Free Centre faction, yesterday protested against a tax exemption on IL700 per month paid to all Cabinet Members as a "special grant" (for their official housing expenses).

In a letter to Finance Minister Yehoshua Rabinowitz, Nof said the exemption recently authorised by the Ministry was a serious erosion of the tax reform by those who should be setting the example.

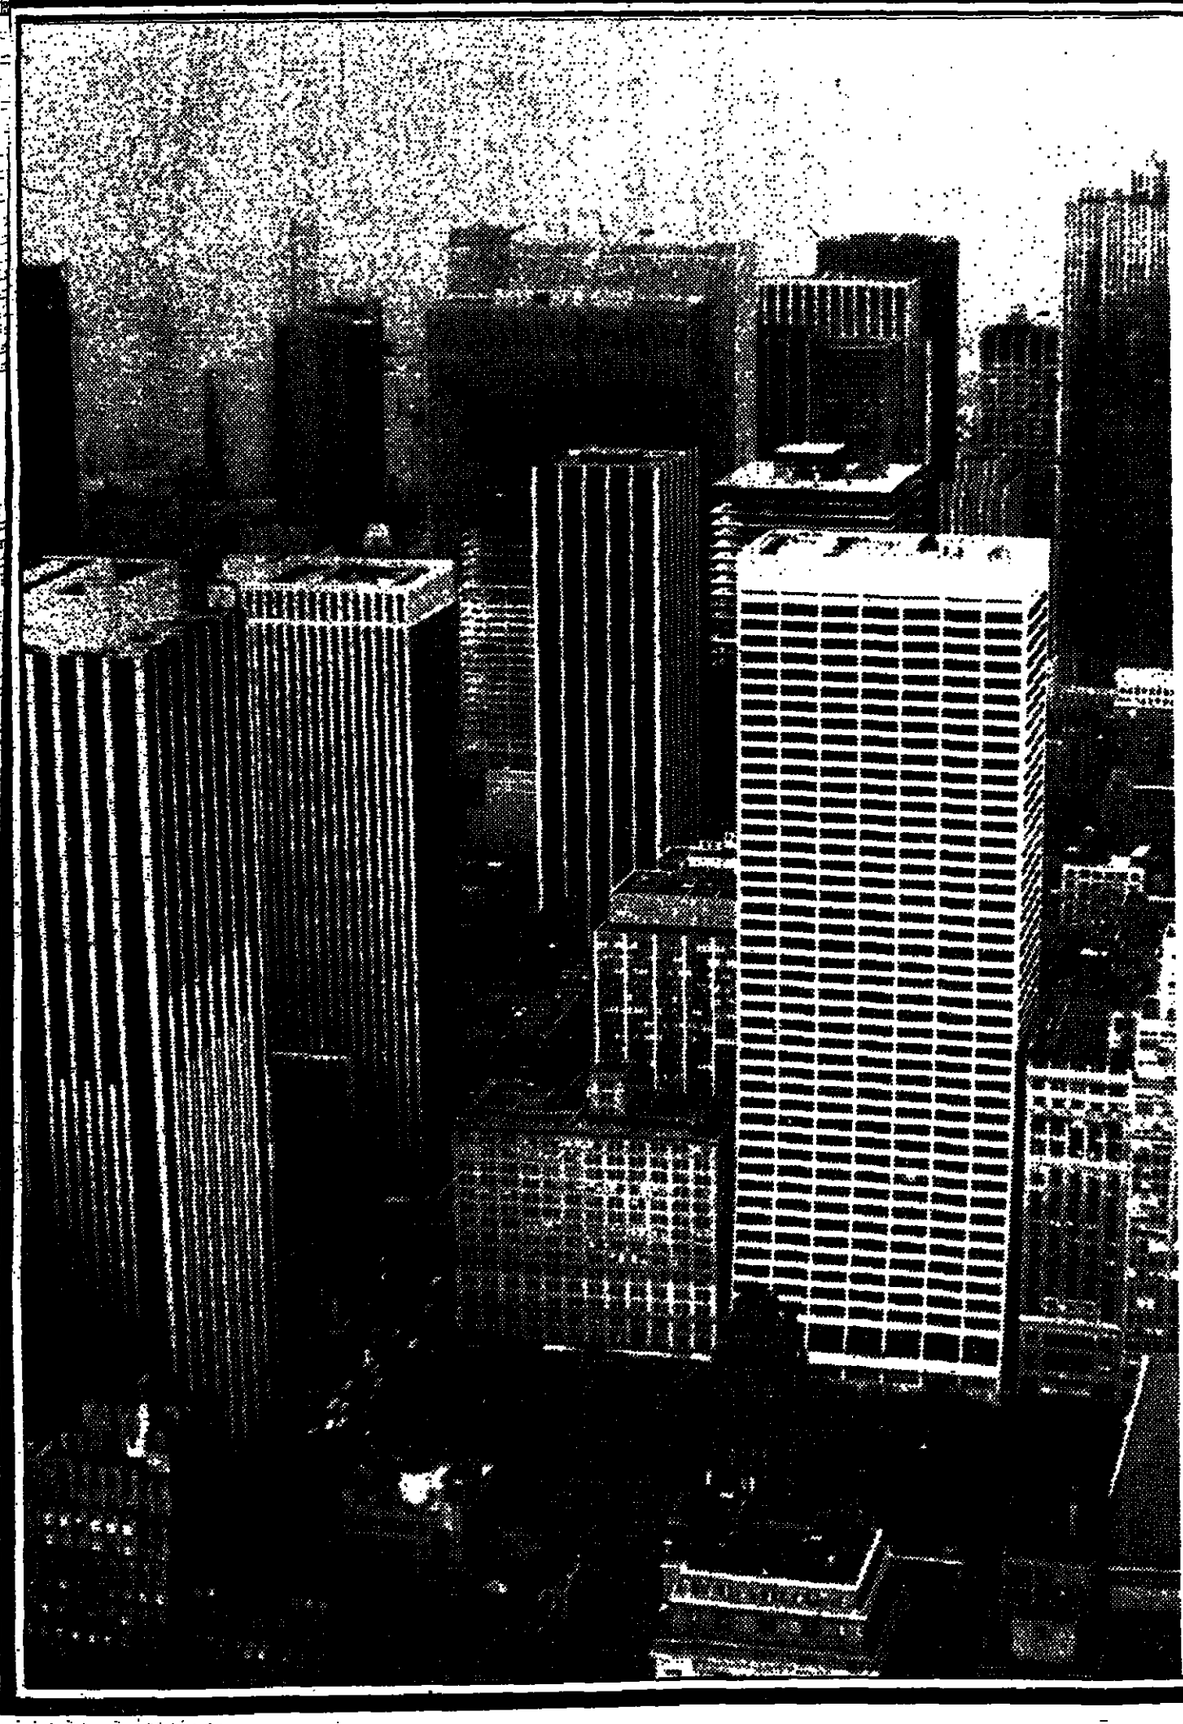

Ashdot Port busy again

By YITZHAK OKED
Jerusalem Post Reporter

ASHDOD. — After several weeks of lack of work at the port here, yesterday marked a turning point. There are now 12 ships in port.

For the first time in several long weeks, 35 work gangs were employed. During the summer there had been weeks when only ten gangs were at work.

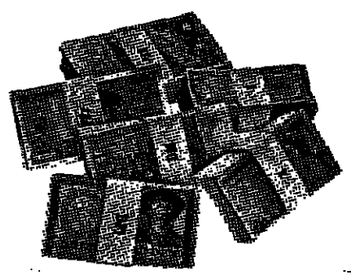

Ashdod port spokesman Haim Shushan says the new trend would continue for another few weeks when the citrus season gets into full swing.

When your bank becomes more and more international:

That's a quiet revolution.

Its dynamic growth and development have made Bank Hapoalim an international bank, with a network of branches and representative offices in the great financial centres of the world. The connections of the bank with well-known firms and economic complexes have increased dramatically. The scope of transactions undertaken has widened considerably.
So, today, the international services Bank Hapoalim offers you have multiplied and are constantly increasing, both in numbers and efficiency.

More branches and representatives around the world

Today, you'll find Bank Hapoalim in New York, London, Zurich, Sao Paulo, Johannesburg and Buenos Aires. In the future additional branches and representative offices will be opened abroad. The expansion of the international activities of the bank through its direct branches abroad is coupled with a continuing expansion of its connections with correspondent banks.

Dr. K lashes out at oil price hike's

ORLANDO, Florida. — U.S. Secretary of State Henry Kissinger said yesterday he expects a new price increase in foreign oil to have serious repercussions in the world economy.

Speaking to the Southern Governors Conference, Kissinger did not estimate what the new oil price might be but he pointed out that the cost of Arab petroleum has gone up 500 per cent in the last five years.

Kissinger said it is essential that the U.S. and its industrial allies get together on an overall energy policy before another Arab price increase is announced.

(World hopes to avert a sharp increase in oil prices were bolstered yesterday as word spread that France has called another international energy meeting. French President Giscard d'Estaing's office announced the call for the October meeting on Monday night. The fact that oil-producing countries, as well as industrial countries, have agreed to meet in Paris means that the producers may show a conciliatory spirit when they meet on September 24 in Vienna to consider raising oil prices, French Foreign Minister Jean Sauvagnargues suggested.)

Kissinger in his speech yesterday spoke sternly although indirectly concerning a jump in Arab oil costs.

"The U.S. cannot entrust its economic and political destiny to decisions made elsewhere," Kissinger said.

An additional large price increase by the Organization of Petroleum Exporting Countries (Opec) would leave the Western world open to both economic and political manipulation, Kissinger said. However, it would be the poorer nations that would be the biggest losers, he added, since they have neither the financial nor political resources to handle a destructive increase in oil prices.

The only answer, he said, is a programme of immediate conservation of existing oil supplies, combined with a major programme for developing new sources of energy under an overall arrangement between consumer and oil-producer nations that would stabilize the entire situation.

Also speaking to the governors conference, retired Navy Adm. Elmo Zumwalt Jr. said the U.S. should immediately begin stockpiling oil for military and domestic use "so we can survive another period of political blackmail."

Zumwalt, who stepped down as chief of naval operations last year, said the U.S. should also "start dealing in a tougher manner with the Opec nations and the Soviet Union."

The admiral and Sen. Dale Bumpers spoke at the conference just before Kissinger addressed the group.

Sen. Bumpers (Dem.-Arkansas) said if petrol price controls were lifted today, the oil companies would get a $12b. profit "they are not now getting."

Arabs shell out for London flats

LONDON (AP). — Foreign visitors to Britain, especially Arabs, paid up to £1,000 (almost IL15,000) a week for homes in London this summer, apartment rental agencies said yesterday.

"The prices people were prepared to pay broke all records," said Michael Nyman, a director of State Apartments.

"There has been an incredible demand for the best houses in London. The Arabs like to leave the Middle East during the hottest months. Normally they go to the Lebanon, but because of the trouble there this year many of them came to London," Nyman said.

Agencies spoke of Arabs paying six months' rent in advance with cash from suitcases full of banknotes. Nyman said his agency could not find enough homes in central London at rents from £250 a week and up.

Moslem rebels hand over list of demands to Marcos

MANILA (AP). — Defectors from the Moslem rebellion are demanding that President Ferdinand Marcos withdraw most of his troops as part of the price of peace in the 35-month-old rebellion in the southern Philippines.

Among other demands in a 28-point manifesto presented on Saturday to Mr. Marcos were that he create a Moslem armed force and a representative Islamic council, a former insurgent commander said yesterday.

Al Calaung, who led insurgents against the government in Jolo, said he and other dissidents were to discuss their demands with government officials today.

In their manifesto, the Moslem insurgents nominated the 28-year-old Calaung, to be commander-in-chief of a Moro internal force.

The manifesto, which has not been reported by the local press, revealed at least one split among the Moslems, who recently have switched loyalties. This had led the government to claim that the rebellion led by the Moro National Liberation Front (MNLF) was disintegrating.

Spokesmen abroad for the MNLF have disowned the defectors.

Twenty-five Moslems signed the manifesto. They claimed to represent the majority of the Moro National Liberation Front and its Bangsa Moro Army in the southern islands of Basilan, Sulu and Tawi-Tawi.

They said they recognized the territorial integrity and national sovereignty of the Philippines, a reference to charges the Moslem rebels have wanted independence.

They also asked that at least two of the signatories be named commissioners of new regions created in the south, that Moro colleges, "similar to that of Tuskegee University in Alabama," be established, and each Moro commander be permitted to carry sidearms and be given 20 M14 rifles to be distributed to bodyguards.

The dissidents asked that the government give back-pay to government defectors from the time they left their government posts and that each commander be allowed to make the Moslem pilgrimage to Mecca in the company of three persons at government expense. (UPI, AP)

Kiss hid IRA bomb, prosecutor charges

LONDON. — A boy kissed a blonde girl's neck in the dimly lit bar of the Horse and Groom pub. It was October, 1974, and a few minutes after they left, a bomb exploded, killing five patrons.

The lovers, the prosecution told the heavily-guarded Old Bailey court yesterday, were a bomb-planting squad of the IRA pushing their campaign to drive British troops out of Northern Ireland.

"The prosecution will show you there was a courting couple there, the man kissing the girl's neck. They were sitting there in this way while they were getting the bomb in position," said Sir Michael Havers, the chief prosecution lawyer.

The girl, he said, was 17-year-old Carole Richardson, born in London, and the boy was Patrick Armstrong, 24, of Belfast.

Havers alleged that the boy and the girl were only pretending to be lovers while they placed the bomb under a wooden seat in an alcove of the bar at Guildford, 48 kms. south of London.

The bar was a hangout for British army troops from a nearby military complex, and most of them had served in Northern Ireland.

Armstrong, and another of two Irishmen on trial with him and the girl, were charged with murdering two drinkers in the King's Arms pub at Woolwich, east of London. Like the Horse and Groom, the King's Arms is close to a British Army installation.

The four accused were charged on a total of 11 counts involving seven killings. When asked how he pleaded, Hill told Mr. Justice Donaldson, "Your justice stinks." But after consulting with defence lawyers, all four pleaded innocent.

The trial is expected to last at least two months.

Everyone who entered the Old Bailey, London's central criminal court, was frisked by a team of police yesterday. Dogs trained to sniff out explosives searched every room in the building. Marksmen were posted on adjoining roofs and vehicles arriving at the car park were checked by police using bomb-detectors.

Throughout London, police notices at subway stations warned commuters to be suspicious of packages in the mail. Detectives were sent into postal sorting offices to run monitors over parcels from Ireland. (UPI, AP)

Ford to ask Congress to overhaul CIA

WASHINGTON. — President Ford said yesterday he will ask Congress to overhaul the U.S. intelligence community and retain controversial operations when national security is at stake.

Ford told an informal news conference in his White House Oval Office that he would be making legislative recommendations and administrative changes in the Central Intelligence Agency as a result of the Rockefeller Commission investigation and congressional inquiries.

"But I wouldn't rule out necessary political activity by the United States if it involves our security," he said when asked whether he would strip the CIA of its covert operations.

Although the President did not make a firm commitment to a CIA overhaul, it was the first time he has indicated he is considering such action, the "Chicago Sun-Times" commented Monday.

Ford told the paper his decision, which could involve shifting some CIA intelligence activities to other agency, will be made soon part of a major package of rec mendations for reorganizing the ganization.

A Senate committee has in tigated the CIA and suggested agency interfered overmuch in affairs of such nations as Chile Greece — in addition to spying Americans in direct violation of legislative mandate.

Until Monday, Ford had co tently defended the CIA in both intelligence activities and agains legations of so-called "dirty tric the "Sun-Times" said.

However, Ford said there has no "major CIA involvement strife-torn Portugal and that populace's anti-Communist turn produced by normal diplomatic p sures. CIA chief reveals $3m. spent on deadly toxins

WASHINGTON (AP). — The U.S. Central Intelligence Agency (CIA) spent nearly $3m. developing and maintaining a supply of deadly poisons and sophisticated devices for using them, director William Colby testified yesterday.

He told a Senate committee that one device for using the poisons was a silent dart gun that could kill without leaving a clue about the cause of death.

Colby told the Senate Intelligence Committee work on the poisons began in 1952 in an effort to replace cyanide suicide capsules used by agents in World War II. But he offered no explanation why the agency had developed poisons in quantities which committee chairman Frank Church (Democrat-Idaho) said were capable of killing hundreds of thousands of people.

The CIA director acknowledged that some of the most deadly poisons — shellfish toxin and cobra venom — had been kept by the agency despite a presidential order to destroy such substances. A total of 27 lethal and incapacitating agents were discovered in a vault earlier this year at a CIA laboratory.

Testifying under oath at the first public hearing by the eight-month old Intelligence Committee, Colby said two instances could be found in which poisons had been used operationally.

The first use of the poison occurred in 1960 when U-2 spy-plane pilot Francis Gary Powers carried a tiny drill bit coated with shellfish toxin during his flight over the Soviet Union. Powers was shot down by Soviets, but he did not use the son to take his life.

In the second operation, a fed guard dogs meat treated an incapacitating drug while ducting a clandestine operatio southeast Asia, Colby said. The sons and weapons to use them developed in a joint project with U.S. army, but all of the fun was provided by the CIA, ac ing to Colby's testimony.

As an example of one of weapons developed in the pro Colby produced an electric dart resembling a .45-calibre pistol said it could silently fire darts tre with shellfish toxin.

The dart would hit the victim out his knowledge and the po which produces almost instanta death, would not show up in autopsy, Colby said.

"As a murder instrument, it about as efficient as you can Church said.

With former CIA director Ric Helms sitting in the audience, C testified that a middle-level CIA ficer had decided on his own to destroy the shellfish toxin bec he felt "the cost and difficult isolating the shellfish toxin wer great that it simply made no s to destroy it."

The employee told no one a the retention of the toxin, de what Colby called "clear instructi delivered by Helms and former of covert operations Thomas K messines that CIA stockpiles destroyed.

AMNESTY INTERNATIONAL:
Kidnapped Lebanese Jew was held in Damascus

LONDON. — News has reached Amnesty International that Albert Elia, the former head of the Jewish Community in Lebanon who was kidnapped from Beirut in September, 1971, was held prior to August 1973 at the Al Rowda investigation centre in Damascus where he was tortured. Amnesty also reports that the Syrian Government continues to deny his imprisonment.

Elia is one of three Jewish prisoners "adopted" by the London-based organization. The organization notes that the two other adopted prisoners, Syrian Jews Nissim Katri and Joseph Swed, were released in July, 1974 without any charges being brought against them. Amnesty reports that it has received information according to which Swed's mental condition is disturbed and he is limping as a result of ill treatment.

The facts are contained in Amnesty International's annual report for 1974/75 published here on Sunday. The report lists human rights violations in 107 countries as well as detailing the activities of the organization.

On the condition of Syrian Jewry the report states:

"AI believes that the conditions of the Syrian Jews have eased slightly. Some of the restrictions, such as the curfew and the 2.5 km. travel limit, appear to be applied with less stringency. AI knows of Jews who have been permitted to leave the country, one on a permanent basis, and has heard that four other Jews were allowed to leave during the past four months."

Turning to Israel, the report says that during the past year Amnesty raised many individual cases of imprisonment in Israel in letters to the Israel Attorney General. Amnesty has also expressed concern, in a letter to Prime Minister Yitzhak Rabin, regarding two aspects of the administration of the West Bank territory by the Israel authorities: deportation and administrative detention.

The organization has urged Israel to terminate the practice of deporting residents of the administered areas and allow those who have been deported to return to their homes. The report says AI has received allegations of torture relating to administrative detainees following the arrest of several hundred Arabs from the West Bank who were charged with membership of the Palestine National Front.

The report on the Soviet Union mentions Amnesty's intervention on behalf of Dr. Mikhail Stern but concentrates mainly on non-Jewish dissenters. (JTA)

Whites seen in ranks of Angolan guerrillas

LISBON (AP). — Many of the thousands of refugees pouring into Portugal from Angola claim to have seen armed white men in the ranks of each of the three black liberation movements fighting for control of the African territory.

There have been previous reports of white mercenaries fighting in Angola, but they were said to be only in the ranks of the Zaire-backed National Front for the Liberation of Angola (FNLA) which controls large sections of the north of the country.

Corroborating eyewitness accounts from numerous refugees who have flown into Lisbon during the past few days indicate that white men are also fighting with the Moscow-backed Popular Movement for the Liberation of Angola (MPLA) which controls the capital, Luanda, and the National Union for the Total Independence of Angola (UNITA) which operates in central and southern Angola.

The refugees, many of them in state of shock, fatigue and distress over the loss of relatives, friends or personal possessions, could give no details of the number or origin of the white mercenaries. Those with relatives still in Angola or with a remnant of hope for the recovery of personal property were reluctant to allow the use of their names.

Some of the refugees gave a more precise account. Brothers Vitor and Jose Antunes, who arrived from Luso in eastern Angola, said they witnessed bitter fighting for control of the town between MPLA and UNITA units. The town's main hotel, used as a UNITA headquarters, was completely destroyed by an MPLA artillery attack, they said.

"We saw white men fighting on both sides," Vitor said. "Those with UNITA were Portuguese. Those with MPLA spoke Spanish and seemed to be Cubans. We were told that the Cubans came to Angola as instructors but took over combat commands when the fighting began."

Gulhermo Francisco Almeida, a 53-year-old beekeeper from Cela in central Angola, said he saw armed white men commanding both UNITA and FNLA units, and observed bodies of black and white battle casualties being removed from the streets.

The reports were backed by numerous other refugees. Many said they were molested by guerrillas who robbed them of money, jewellery and automobiles, but there were few reports of outright violence against the white refugees. Most of the relatively few casualties reported among white residents seemed to have been caught in crossfire between the guerrillas.

Alvaro Fernandes, a forestry official from Santa Comba, said he was forced at a roadblock to make a money contribution to UNITA which entitled him to full membership of the guerrilla organization.

"I think many of the Portuguese who are fighting with the movements joined them since the 1974 Portuguese revolution which led to the promise of independence for Angola," Fernandes said. "They probably want to stay in Angola and they think they are buying time with what they are doing."

Vitor Antunes described the white liberation fighters as being either foreign mercenaries or "Portuguese opportunists who are getting on the bandwagon."

Mrs. Peron's right-hand man ousted

Interim president reshuffles cabinet in Argentina

BUENOS AIRES. — Interim President Italo Luder has replaced the chief figure in the Cabinet in a surprise reshuffle only 48 hours after taking over temporarily from President Maria Estela Peron.

The changes were seen as new moves to further undermine Mrs. Peron's power base, already eroded by Argentina's continuing economic crisis and power struggles between left- and right-wing factions of the ruling Peronist movement.

The shakeup also strengthened speculation Mrs. Peron may not return to her job.

Luder replaced the Ministers of the Interior and Defence, Vicente Damasco and Jorge Garrido, and ousted Mrs. Peron's private and press secretaries. Damasco was considered Mrs. Peron's right-hand man.

Luder named Foreign Minister Angel F. Robledo as new Interior Minister. It was unclear if Robledo would hold both portfolios as no new Foreign Minister was named. Tomas Vottero, a little known Peronist linked to Robledo, was named new Defence Minister.

The changes caught observers by surprise, since Senator Luder is ostensibly standing in as president for between 30 and 45 days during the absence of Mrs. Peron on a rest cure from the strains of office at a country club in Cordoba province.

It was not immediately clear whether the changes had been decided before her departure last Saturday, or were an independent action by her 58-year-old interim substitute, possibly indicating that his rule might not be as short as officially forecast.

The reshuffle was believed to be in response to pressure from the military who are assuming increasing prominence in national affairs and pressing for an executive go-ahead to unleash full-scale war on Argentina's rampaging guerrillas.

Colonel Damasco's appointment last month angered the Army because it appeared to commit it to political support of Mrs. Peron's weakening government. The army forced his resignation from active service, and ousted army commander General Alberto Numa Laplane for permitting the appointment.

Robledo, who takes over the Interior Ministry, was Defence Minister under President Juan Peron. He is expected to prove the dominant figure in the Cabinet and is another old lawyer friend of Luder from Santa Fe.

The new Defence Minister, Mr Vottero, now a banker, is also a friend of Senator Luder from Santa Fe and a former legal partner of Robledo. But he is not known to have been politically active since the 1950's and his appointment is reported to have surprised the Army.

Meanwhile, political terrorism continued. A powerful bomb exploded at the home of a wealthy businessman in Buenos Aires causing extensive damage but no injuries.

Leftist terrorists killed a retired policeman in Cordoba, 30 miles from where Mrs. Peron is resting, and one of the soldiers injured in a guerrilla attempt on a plane last month died.

Turkish Cypriots threaten to set up their own state

ANKARA (UPI). — Turkish Cypriots will declare an independent state in the north if Archbishop Makarios refuses to negotiate the future of the island republic with them, Turkish Cypriot leader Rauf Denktash said yesterday.

He said, however, that this step would not lead to union with Turkey.

"If Makarios refuses to negotiate and chooses to go to the (United Nations) General Assembly once again, usurping the rights of the Cyprus government, as if he still represents the Turkish community... we have to declare our independence," Denktash said in a television interview in Ankara.

Denktash arrived in Ankara Saturday on his way back to Nicosia from New York where his talks with Glafcos Clerides, the Greek Cypriot representative, broke down in an exchange of verbal accusations.

"For the time being I see no other alternative. If I knew of better less drastic alternatives, I would certainly consider them. Makarios is leaving us no other alternative," Denktash said.

Denktash rejected allegations that declaration of independence in the north of Cyprus was a first step towards union with Turkey.

"It is not a first step. It is a declaration of independence on an independent island. We shall watch that the south is not annexed to Greece. That would be against our interest," he said.

However, Denktash said he was seeking the support of the Ankara government prior to asking the Turkish Cypriot constituent assembly to declare independence.

Turkish armed forces invaded the north of Cyprus following a July 1974 coup against President Makarios that was backed by the military junta then in power in Greece.

Denktash declared the areas under the control of the Turkish armed forces, as a federated Turkish Cypriot state on February 13 this year and became its President, as a first step towards the proposed two-zone federal Cyprus Republic.

However, deep differences between Greek and Turkish Cypriot communities on the question of the refugees, border lines separating the Turkish and the Greek Cypriot zones, and implementation of a future federal state has blocked an early solution for the Cyprus problem.

MOSCOW (UPI). — The Soviet Union has agreed in principle to buy U.S. grain on a regular and long-term basis, an American negotiator said yesterday. The announcement followed a report in "Pravda" that the Soviet grain harvest is in trouble this year.

Charles Robinson, Undersecretary of State for Economic Affairs, said he was "very optimistic" such an accord could be signed in the next few weeks. The unprecedented agreement would oblige the Soviet Union to buy a certain amount of American surplus grain every year, instead of draining the U.S. market every time it has a harvest failure, as it has this year.

By spreading Soviet grain purchases over a number of years, the agreement would help protect the Americans against sudden price surges in grain and related foodstuffs. Robinson would not say how much grain would be involved. He said the Soviet Union would become the first country to enter into such a binding agreement with the U.S.

"What is entailed is a firm commitment from both the supplier's and purchaser's standpoint," he said.

"We are still in an intensive stage of our negotiations, so it wouldn't be appropriate for me to discuss detailed terms," Robinson said, "but generally it's a multi-year agreement involving a substantial amount of grain from the U.S."

Asked if the deal entailed the sale or barter of Soviet oil to the U.S., Robinson replied: "We were here primarily to discuss grain at this stage, and any consideration of oil has been of a very preliminary nature."

He said President Ford's statement in St. Louis, Missouri last week correctly defines the situation. Ford said an agreement could cover up to five years and possibly involve a grain-oil barter.

In answer to a question, Robinson said the U.S. was not making a no-deal, no-grain ultimatum.

"It is clear that there was an understanding with George Meany which the President reached last week, that we would extend a moratorium on supplemental grain sales this year pending negotiation of a longer-term agreement," Robinson said. "But there's no commitment beyond the undertaking to explore the possibility of such an agreement."

Meanwhile "Pravda" reported yesterday desperate shortages of agricultural machinery in Siberia are causing significant losses to the grain harvest, already badly hit by drought. In some areas farm workers have been forced to gather the crop by hand.

The Communist Party daily said "alarming signals are being heard of defective work and sometimes significant grain losses in southwest Siberia." Sometimes this was due to weak control, but the main reason, "Pravda" indicated, was lack of machinery or machinery which was inefficient.

"In some regions, the production of technical devices is very low and there are not enough trucks to transport grain," the newspaper said. Siberian farm workers received only 30 modern harvesters though 10,000 were ordered for the region. Five hundred were scheduled to be produced by one factory last year but it failed to complete a single machine, "Pravda" said.

"Pravda" said "about 1,000 workers on one collective farm went to gather the crop by hand." Elsewhere workers using rakes brought in an extra 50 kilos per hectare after threshing. A special cutting machine designed to deal with short grain, which constitutes much of this year's crop, "can be found only in catalogues," "Pravda" said.

Meanwhile reports from Warsaw indicated that Poland too is suffering grain shortages.

UN adopts measures to close gap between rich and poor nations

UNITED NATIONS. — Weary UN delegates unanimously adopted a lengthy declaration designed to bridge the gap between rich and poor nations after working long into the night to complete economic negotiations before the start of the regular 1975 General Assembly yesterday.

Red-eyed diplomats returned to the assembly hall to close out the 17-day special economic session late yesterday morning after their third consecutive all-night meeting.

They agreed to adopt the declaration — aimed at changing the international trade, investment and aid systems to improve things for the developing countries — by consensus, without a vote. But the consensus included some reservations voiced by the U.S. and some joint comments by the European Common Market countries.

U.S. delegate, Jacob Myerson, said Washington did not accept any implication that the world now was embarked on "something called a new international economic order." This is what the poorer countries had sought.

Delegates to the UN representing the EEC, Japan, Spain and Canada indicated reservations with the measures approved but diplomats on all sides took the view that the industrialized states' comments did not weaken substantially the consensus worked out during intensive private negotiations.

This was contained in nearly 20 pages of recommendations on international trade, the transfer of resources for financing development, science and technology, industrialization, food and agriculture, cooperation among the developing countries, and the restructuring of the economic and social sectors of the UN system.

The 138-nation committee, headed by Dutch Development Minister Jan Pronk, called for concerted efforts to improve the terms of trade of developing countries to eliminate the economic imbalance between them and the developed nations.

It also proposed concerted action "to accelerate the growth and diversification of the export trade of developing countries in manufactures and semi-manufactures and in processed and semi-processed products to increase their share in world industrial output and world trade within the framework of an expanding world economy."

Referring to proposals for improvements in developing countries' receipts from the sale of their commodities, the American delegate said the U.S. was committed to help them within the market system rather than by supplanting existing market mechanisms.

While agreeing to study indexation — the linking of prices of raw materials exported by developing countries to prices of their essential imports — the U.S. must make clear that it did not support this proposal, Mr. Myerson said.

But he asserted that the U.S. joined in most of the specific undertakings made and warmly associated itself with the larger objectives.

"The U.S. fully supports the objective of an effective increase in official development assistance," Myerson said. "It does not, however, consider the establishment of specific targets as likely to achieve the intended result."

At yesterday's meeting, Syria said Israel had violated the conditions for UN membership and should be banished from the General Assembly. This was seen as foreshadowing a possible challenge to the Israel delegation at the regular Assembly session.

Syrian Representative Mouffak Allaf said: "The representatives of the Zionist regime who have attended this session represent a regime that is racist, aggressive and which occupies by force the territories of member-states of the United Nations and violates the essential conditions for the qualifications of membership which have been agreed within our organization."

He was immediately answered by Israel representative Haim Herzog, who said Israel rejected the "unwarranted and ill-conceived intervention by the Syrian delegation, injecting, as is their wont, a discordant note into this assembly which has been characterized by an atmosphere of consensus."

He said neither this action nor "any other disruptive actions by Syria or other countries" would deter his government from seeking accord with its neighbours and moving along the road towards peace in the Middle East."

Evacuees from Diego Garcia said living in abject poverty

PORT LOUIS, MAURITIUS (AP). — Most of the islanders displaced from Diego Garcia to make way for a U.S naval base are living here "well below the poverty line," church officials said yesterday.

The situation of the evacuees provoked controversy in Washington and London earlier this month after newspaper reports that the U.S. and British governments failed to disclose the reluctance of some of the islanders to leave their coral atoll in the Indian Ocean.

The Roman Catholic Institute for Development and Progress in Mauritius told a newsman it found 60 per cent of the displaced families currently live on less than 200 rupees (IL200) a month, including welfare assistance provided by the Mauritian government.

About 1,200 persons were moved southward 1,600 kms to Mauritius from their British-owned atoll over a five-year period.

The Mauritian government has said it will rehouse the evacuees somewhere around this capital city with a British relief and resettlement grant of £650,000 (IL8.5m.) received in 1973. Land has been bought for the housing but no construction work has started.

The institute said it interviewed 300 of the islanders and found among them only seven heads of families literate enough to write their names. Only one-quarter of the children attend school, the institute said. Most of the evacuees work on a part-time basis as fishermen, truck loaders or stevedores. A minority earn as little as 100 rupees a month, the institute added.

The institute claims most of the evacuees live in abject poverty, without prospect of immediate improvement, and long for their homeland. IDP officials said the islanders were abruptly transferred from a slow, almost primitive lifestyle to a rapidly developing country with different customs and language.

The evacuees have made constant appeals to the Mauritian authorities, through lawyers and politicians, for cash compensation for their displacement.

A legal tangle over citizenship has stalled a decision in the courts. The British High Commission here insists the islanders now are Mauritians, while some local politicians say Britain still has responsibility for the islanders' resettlement.

Some Diego Garcians who came to Mauritius before the displacement are much better off than those who followed later. The first arrivals have regular jobs and better homes and appear fully integrated in the 860,000 population of Mauritius.

Mauritius was granted full independence from Britain in 1968. It was a French possession from 1710 to 1810 when it was seized by the British to protect shipping lanes during the Napoleonic wars.

The island is located in the Indian Ocean 900 kms east of Madagascar.

U.S. firm paid $4.5m. to agent in Saudi deal

WASHINGTON (UPI). — Congressman Les Aspin said Monday that a multi-million dollar contract between Saudi Arabia and the Vinnell Corp. of California for training Saudi soldiers included a $4.5m. fee for Saudi businessman Ghassan Shaker.

Aspin, a Wisconsin Democrat, charged that the size of the fee was "suspiciously large." He added: "Either Mr. Shaker pocketed an exorbitant fee or some of the $4.5m. was illicitly diverted."

The Vinnell Corp. of Alhambra, Calif., concluded the controversial three-year contract in January, 1975. Vinnell is the first American private contractor to undertake the training of the Saudi military force.

The Defence Department acted as an intermediary in arranging the unusual contract.

"Multi-million dollar agents' fees are a sleazy business which the Pentagon should not be involved in at all," Aspin said. He proposed that a ceiling be placed on fees.

Aspin obtained the details of the fee paid to Shaker, president of a Beirut bank (Banque du Liban et d'Outre-Mer), from the Defence Department.

THERE WAS drama in this deal from the Great Britain-Lebanon match in the European Championships in Brighton, England. West was Rodrigue, a well-known British internationalist. As we sit in our easy chairs contemplating the deal, it is easy to criticize West for his double, especially in a team of four match. And then his partner Friday allowed the double to stand. It would have been better had he retreated to three diamonds, unmakeable of course, but better than giving the opponents a free game.

So for the British it was a crisis — but here is what happened. The diamond ace won the first trick, and the heart 7 was led to the second trick. What should declarer do? Would West lead away from the ace Queen? South decided that the problem was a "no-never mind." He had an alternate plan to the finesse just in case East had the heart queen. He won with the king in dummy, played the diamond queen, led to the club ace, and played the diamond king in order to discard a heart. But West gratefully ruffed and the defence won one spade, two hearts, one diamond and the club king, setting the contract.

It is interesting to note that it was vital for West to attack hearts as he did; otherwise declarer could have established spades in order to discard hearts. Moreover, if West had opened with a small heart rather than the diamond ace, South would have had no choice but the double finesse.

So we have a moral: when in a bad spot look carefully and maybe you will find a way out.

Another decline

...W YORK (AP). — The stock ...rket declined again yesterday. ...alysts noted concern over infla...n and the interest rate outlook. The Dow Jones average of 30 In...strials, off 36.92 points over the ...st five trading days, was down ...other 8.06 points at 795.13. Losers ...stripped gainers by more than ...5 to 2 margin on the New York ...ock Exchange. Trading was relatively light.

The Dow rose about 3 points at the outset in response to a government report Monday that industrial production had registered its sharpest rise in nearly three years last month. But prices then slipped lower. A report by the Congressional Budget Office predicted that the problems of inflation and high unemployment would continue for years.

BUSINESS BRIEFS

NIBA FASHIONS will participate in four fashions shows this month and the next in Europe and the United States, as part of its export drive. The company will be presenting its 1976 summer fashions.

Last year's exports by Niba, primarily to the United States, Europe, South Africa, Japan and Australia came to $1.2m.

PAZ HAS RECENTLY started selling a revolutionary type of motor oil called Paz-S.I.G., which has a larger viscosity stability than their previous product and is multi-grade.

Paz is the first company in the country to sell this type of motor oil. S.I.G. (stay-in-grade) is made specially for car petrol engines, both new and old.

KOL GIL, the Givat Brenner juvenile furniture company, has entered the toy field, according to company manager Ze'ev Rice. He said surplus pinewood and formica pieces left over from furniture manufacture are used for trains, carts and pieces of dollhouse furniture which are miniature replicas of the regular Kol Gil line.

POLYCHEMICALS of Tel Aviv has begun an intensive marketing drive for its Asbestolit protective coating for roofs. The firm claims Asbestolit and its prime coat can be applied by any homeowner at a cost of approximately IL17 per square metre.

Practical policies needed to deal with the Sinai compensation

By MOSHE ATER
Jerusalem Post Economic Editor

ONE PARADOXICAL outcome of the Sinai accord is likely to be a substantial improvement in our balance of payments, though we seem to be doing our best to let the new resources go down the drain without the public being aware of it.

The impending improvement is, of course, a windfall gain from an accord negotiated for political purposes. The agreement masterminded by Dr. Kissinger means for us the loss of important strategic and economic assets which will have to be replaced or offset at heavy cost. We shall have to construct new defences, roads, army camps, oil stores, in order — at best — to prevent the deterioration of our present position. However, we have also been promised American aid to help us shoulder this additional burden. And this aid is to be provided in foreign currency.

The exact amount we are to receive is not yet known. It depends on secret commitments, on their implementation by the U.S. administra*tion, and on the elbow-room left by* Congress, but the sum is expected to be fairly large. A figure tentatively quoted is $550m. — including $350m. on account of the new defence line, and $150m. on account of the oil storage facilities. This represents more than one half of the aggregate grants and loans we received from the U.S. last year, and almost one third of the aid budgeted for 1975 (before the agreement). The amount is equivalent to about one half of our total non-defence foreign trade deficit.

We shall be receiving this amount in dollars, while the foreign currency cost of the construction projects will account for only a small fraction of it. We shall thus be able to save most of the aid for a rainy day, to replenish our sadly diminished reserves, which currently stand at about $1.2b. They are down $150m. from their post-devaluation peak, and are expected to decline by about another $200m. by the end of 1975.

If the minimum reserve required by a country like Israel is put at only a three-months foreign currency bill, it should approximate $2b. The increment now likely would therefore be a very welcome contribution. Indeed, it may be presumed to do double service, because ampler reserves are likely to improve Israel's international credit rating, and thus to ease the inflow of more capital from abroad.

However, if this is to be achieved, appropriate steps must be taken. In particular, the special revenue must be kept separate, to prevent its being dissipated for ordinary ends, even though this may run contrary to our established tradition of highly centralistic financial management. To go by all past experience, the Sinai compensation will be thrown into the common kitty, and will serve as just more grist for the general mill. It may be argued that nothing else is required, that the saving will be achieved by elementary prudence. However, this is far from certain. It is more likely that current needs will press ahead of the necessity to save, that the provision of additional wherewithal will cause demand to rise by at least an equal amount, and that the administration will be too weak to fend off this pressure. Businessmen, trade unions, politicians, private people are already readying themselves to share in the coming feast.

In point of fact, it is not only se*paration which is needed, but prac*tical policies as well. The Sinai withdrawal will have to be accompanied by huge unproductive investments. The sums involved are nebulous, but are likely to amount to a substantial part of our annual investment total. The fact that together with this we may get a gratuity from the American treasury has nothing to do with the execution of the local projects.

The manpower and material resources will have to be provided largely by our economy, and will have to be found within the relatively short period set out in the accord. In an economy fully occupied and unable to expand, this can easily lead to shortages. In any case, the additional home demand must put paid to the incipient slowdown, and is likely to strengthen inflationary pressure. The economic impact of the hasty construction of the Bar-Lev line is still fresh in everybody's memory. The large defence works necessitated by the withdrawal of 1974 played an important role in propping up our sagging post-war prosperity. But they will probably be dwarfed by the projects we shall now have to carry out. And our economy is today much less in need of support.

The talks with Egypt have been proceeding, however haltingly, over many months, and the possibility of an eventual withdrawal, and its consequences, should have been taken into account long ago. One had the right to expect our economic planners to prepare for such an eventuality, by working out alternative policy variants — e.g. the timely reduction of housing or other investment projects, or fiscal measures for squeezing private consumption, or a blueprint for emergency works (like the one now aired by Mr. Allon) — in order to prevent economic overheating.

However, nothing like that has been prepared. As usual, our policymakers are just as surprised by the results of their own actions as the general public, and are only now beginning to look for solutions. A supplementary budget will be tabled shortly, and public spending — prompted by the Sinai projects — will expand.

Since these projects will add nothing to our wellbeing, the investment involved ought to be financed simply by economic austerity. But this is hardly to be expected in the social climate prevailing in this country. Once the money is received, it will be spent. And an excuse for the waste will be duly found.

Turkish harvesting method keeps its opium poppies off the illicit drug market

By EMEL ANIL

AFYON, Turkey (AP). — The Turkish Government, confident it has succeeded in preventing Turkish opium poppies from finding their way into illicit heroin markets, plans to licence 100,000 farmers to grow poppies again this year for medicinal uses.

Officials said farmers will be allowed to plant 50,000 acres in seven provinces, the same amount planted last year after Turkey ended the two-year opium-cultivation ban it had imposed under pressure from the U.S. At the same time, the Government plans to continue the so-called poppy-straw system of harvesting, used for the first time last year, which prohibits lancing of the poppy pods to extract the raw opium within.

Poppy farmers of Turkey had been producing raw opium gum by slashing the pods when they are ripe sometime in mid-summer. Heroin is a derivative of this raw opium, and so are the morphine and codeine used in medicine.

However, officials say, the medicinal derivatives can also be extracted from the dried husks of the poppy pod, from which heroin cannot be produced. It is the dried husks which the Government now buys, at $1.50 per kilo.

When peasants cart pods to the government office, they are in*spected for the deep gash that* would be left by forbidden lancing to extract raw opium. The cracked pods are put through sieves to check whether they were crushed by the farmers to hide the gash, officials say.

Sources in this west-central poppy-growing region — the name Afyon means opium in Turkish — say smugglers are ready to offer $700 a kilo for raw opium to farmers willing to risk arrest and prison. But Osman Koseoglu, a narcotics agent for 13 years who carries old scars from clashes with smugglers, said there have been no incidents of illegal lancing around here. "My informers also tell me traffic has stopped completely in this area for lack of raw opium," he said.

COIN MARKET NEWS

Price of Bonds gold coin increases

A RISING interest in the Bonds gold coin has resulted in a slight price increase, and by the end of last week the market price had reached IL2,-900. Moreover, the price paid by merchants to collectors and subscribers increased to IL2,650 as compared to the IL2,500 nominal price.

Trade in the Bonds silver coin has not yet begun, but experts are anticipating a substantial rise in prices due to the comparatively small issue — half of other mintage figures in the past two years.

The increased interest in medals continues, with a special interest directed towards the "Ma'ariv" medal issued three years ago on the *occasion of the paper's 25th anniver*sary. The mintage figure was limited to 500 and the *medal was dis*tributed to the paper's employees of ten years or more. Merchants are now prepared to pay up to IL8,500 for the medal, though some have been sold for as low as IL7,300. The acute demand is of course a result of the small issue, but has also been influenced by rumours that the dies were destroyed.

Insurance for terror victims

Jerusalem Post Reporter

About one thousand Israeli civilians who were injured in Arab terror attacks or border incidents will continue to be handled by the National Insurance Institute till next January 1, despite an earlier Government decision that the Defence Ministry would take care of them.

This emerged at a recent Cabinet session, when Labour Minister Moshe Baram explained how budgetary and manpower problems had prevented the inter-departmental transfer. The Government decided as long ago as August 18, 1974, that the Rehabilitation Division of the Defence Ministry will submit recommendations in a few days, to the three ministers involved and the Prime Minister on the procedures for the transfer. Subsequently, the matter will again be brought before the Cabinet.

Kremlin numbers game

THE NUMBER of exit permits granted by the Soviets constitutes no more than one-third of the number of aliya applications submitted to them monthly. Despite this continuing pressure for aliya, the Soviet news agency, Tass, last week contended that the number of Jews seeking to go to Israel has greatly declined.

But the fact is that the number of applications submitted to the Soviet authorities has not dropped, and this despite the sharply stepped-up Soviet campaign of harassment, intimidation and arrests calculated to deal the aliya movement in the USSR a death blow.

More than 150,000 Jews in the Soviet Union have already asked their relatives here for invitations, the first step on the long arduous road to aliya. According to figures that have been made public, some five per cent of Soviet Jewry have already emigrated to Israel since the founding of the State, most of them since 1968. Some 115,000 Soviet Jews arrived here since 1948, 103,000 of them in the last seven years. If anything, this shows an increase in Jewish national feeling in the USSR rather than a decline, as Tass would have it, although such feelings existed before but were thwarted by Stalin's reign of terror and by Khrushchev's adamant ban on aliya.

Another eight per cent of the Jewish population in the USSR has already asked for invitations from Israel, but the fact that they have not come is largely the result of the Soviet refusal to let them go.

Moreover, the Soviets are issuing permits very selectively. Whereas Jews in some cities may eventually, after a prolonged struggle, find their way out of Russia, in other cities, with a not smaller Jewish population, hardly any permits at all can be obtained and the very application for them is far more risky. The differences are not only between the Soviet European republics and the Soviet Asian republics. There are also vast and inexplicable variations in policy between neighbouring cities in one republic. Thus exit visas can be had after a struggle in the Beilorussian city of Minsk. But in other Beilorussian cities, such as Bobruisk and Grodono, both with large Jewish populations, practically no aliya permits are being issued and the atmosphere there towards Jews is described as Stalinist.

Tass has claimed that visas are refused only to those Jews deemed to possess confidential information vital to the security of the USSR. However, Soviet criteria as to who has been exposed to state secrets are so arbitrary that they can prevent the aliya of department store cleaning women, landscape architects and carpenters. Mark Nashpitz and Boris Tzitlonok, for example, the two activists sentenced to five years exile last spring, are a dentist and a manual labourer respectively and could not possibly possess state secrets. Another activist who has been prevented from leaving for Israel, Vitaly Rubin, is an expert on ancient Chinese culture, which is enough for the KGB to claim that he possesses secret information.

If the Tass report is indicative Moscow is busy polishing the policy of the Big Lie on the question of aliya.

An environment that has not turned its back on humanity

In physical planning, as in most other realms, one may learn best from one's own mistakes but it is much more pleasant to learn from someone else's. During a recent visit to Holland and France, Jerusalem Post reporter ABRAHAM RABINOVICH learned that planners there are confronting problems very similar to those facing their Israeli colleagues, not necessarily with more success. In this first of two articles, he writes about town planning in Holland.

"Holland . . . has permitted the countryside to penetrate the towns through its extensive canal networks." (Rubinger)

FROM A TRAIN speeding through a Dutch town at dusk you catch a glimpse of two men fishing in a narrow canal just 20 metres behind a low apartment block where they apparently live. The work day had ended a couple of hours before and they sit comfortably in folding chairs dangling their lines in the water. In a moment, the train has passed out of the built-up area and is in lush countryside. It is a glimpse of an environment which has not turned its back on the human race.

Despite a population density similar to that of Israel, Holland has managed remarkably well to keep its town from spilling over into the countryside. It has, in fact, permitted the countryside to penetrate the towns through its extensive canal networks.

Just as the bulk of Israel's population is crowded into the coastal strip between Netanya and Ashdod, in Holland 10 million people live in the southwestern part of the country and only 3½ million in the north eastern half. The train making the run between Rotterdam and Amsterdam in the heart of the urbanized half of the country stops at intervals of as little as five or 10 minutes in different towns but buffer strips of agricultural land give the traveller a feeling of venturing into the countryside before the next town is reached.

The question of population dispersal much concerns Dutch planners but in this area Israel has clearly achieved much more by building over a score of new towns in remoter parts of the country. (The area between Ashdod and Eilat, for instance, contained less than one per cent of the country's population in 1948 and 11.3 per cent by 1972.)

The Dutch, however, have been unable to effect any significant population shift out of the Rotterdam-Amsterdam area.

"We've been trying to disperse for decades but with no hard results," says a senior national planner in the Hague. He expressed strong doubts that the official policy of doubting the population of the northeastern half of the country by the year 2000 would come close to implementation. Unlike Israel, Holland has not had a flow of immigrants who could be directed to less popular areas. On the contrary, there has been movement from the farms of the northeast to the urban centres of the southwest. Attempts to lure industry to the northeast from the southwest by investment premiums are limited by a Common Market ceiling on such incentives which are aimed at preventing member nations from luring industries away from each other.

IF POPULATION OVERSPILL from the cities is not being directed to remoter parts of the country, neither are suburbs permitted to sprawl uncontrolled around the cities. Much of the overspill is being accommodated in new satellite towns about 15 miles distant from the urban centres. However, the growth of villages near the big cities has been twice that anticipated — this to the chagrin of planners who see danger of erosion to the rural atmosphere by this inflow of commuters.

Some of the satellite towns themselves are undergoing a transformation following initial planning misjudgments. Zutermeer, half an hour's drive from The Hague, is the largest of the satellites and will eventually have 100-125,000 residents. The initial neighbourhood, designed in the mid-1960s, concentrated 70 per cent of the population in high-rise apartment blocks, some of them 20 storeys high. The idea was that by building at high density, less of the countryside would be eaten up by housing.

The planners began to discover that while the countryside was being spared, it was at an expense most of the residents considered intolerable. So unsatisfying was life in the high-rise blocks, that town officials gave a name to the symptoms displayed by many housewives — "flat neuroses." In newer neighbourhoods, the percentage of high rise apartments fell steadily. The final stage, to be completed in 1980, will consist entirely of single storey attached houses, each with its own garden. This will naturally m fewer units built on the site the loss is not as great as m be assumed. If neighbourhood were exclusiv high-rise apartments, sai Zutermeer planner, it could commodate 31,000 residents. a single storey neighbourh the figure will be 22,000. large open spaces and setba required in a high-rise devel ment, mostly waste space, not needed in a low-rise devel ment.

A key point in the Zuterm story with relevance for Is is that public opinion was only listened to but sought The authorities themselves itiated meetings with reside and prospective residents hear from them what th wanted and didn't want. It largely the opinions expresse these meetings that chang Zutermeer from a Bronx-l apartment complex to a liva environment.

ISRAEL PRESS

'Obviously Arafat'

AL HAMISHMAR (Mapam) says the terrorist takeover of the embassy is one more episode in the campaign of the Arab extremists, with Soviet aid, against the interim settlement.

The anger in Cairo may have far-reaching consequences in the Arab world, for despite his denials, it is obvious to all that the person responsible is Arafat. Anger is also directed against the Soviets, and the result may be far-reaching changes in relations with that country, too.

DAVAR (Histadrut) says "The hour of truth is at hand. Repeated warnings by Israel and others that sooner or later the terrorist organizations would endanger the safety and sovereignty of the Arab states themselves have now been borne out. It is to be hoped too that the latest terrorist operation will open the eyes of those European states which assumed that peace cannot be achieved without recognition of the Palestinian terrorists. Moreover, if Egypt itself stands up to such tests it will prove a significant step towards stability and progress towards peace in the Middle East."

HA'ARETZ (independent) says that the operation was not to be taken seriously in the first place and was essentially in the nature of a protest demonstration. A sovereign state, especially one with a highly developed sense of self-respect like Egypt, does not make a 180 degree turnabout in policy nor pronounce its acts a "betrayal" merely in order to save the life of one of its ambassadors. "The basic fact is that Arafat, Syria, Iraq and Libya would like to see Sadat's downfall.

WITH PREJUDICE / ALEX BERLYNE

Mental strabismus and misprint eyes

MANY READERS must have been shocked by a headline which appeared in the "Post" last week — "Man Held in Tel Aviv Clothing Store Fire." If they then steeled themselves to read the gory details of this fiendish crime they presumably discovered that no one had been toasted over a slow fire made up of hipster slacks or candy-striped shirts; all that had occurred, in fact, was that a man had been arrested on suspicion of arson.

Sub-editors work against the clock and are plagued by the necessity of cramming a certain number of letters into, say, a 36 point headline on two columns. This results in them favouring words like "held" in preference to "arrested," or "pact" instead of "agreement," often with ambiguous results. I have every sympathy for them — I myself worked for a while at this thankless task — but that hasn't prevented me from collecting specimens of their more spectacular blunders over the years.

An "Evening News" headline some years ago conjured up visions of Sweeney Todd, the Demon Barber of Fleet Street (whose victims ended up as meat pies): "Three battered in Fish Shop" it announced in large type. The "Daily Telegraph" was equally violent: "Crash Course for Private Pilots," while the dismemberment theme was carried to extremes in the "Evening Argus" — "Star's Broken Leg Hits Box Office."

It's becoming increasingly common to read of celebrities shoplifting at Marks and Sparks. Even so, I was astounded to read in the august "Times" that things had come to a pretty pass indeed: "Queen Sees Fonteyn Take Ten Curtains."

Police reports seem to be particularly vulnerable to this delicious type of ambiguity, for instance: "Three men held in cigarette case" — which must surely contravene the Home Office regulations — or (a happier example from "The Gloucestershire Echo") "Police Found Safe Under Blanket." One of the most mind-boggling headlines in this category comes from "The Hackney Gazette" which paid tribute to the alertness of the local constabulary: "Spotted Man Wanted for Questioning."

The tortured prose favoured by Sports writers leads to all sorts of odd claims: "Injury Forces Miss Truman to Scratch," or "Our Women Lick Male Sportsmen." Things go from bad to worse when they're dealing with the Sport of Kings, mainly because of the strange names given to horses: "Bill Does It Again on Miss "Tweedle" startled the readers of the Evening News" a few years ago.

Regular news stories, however, are capable of out-doing the bluest red-nosed comedian without even trying. "More Women Wanted for Random Sampling," ran a business-news story in "The Times" some time back. The "Evening Standard" joined the chorus of mounting criticism of the law enforcement agencies: "Stripped Girl — Yard to Probe," while the "Daily Telegraph" once beat its own breast: "Nurse Raped — By Our Crime Staff."

The "Kent Messenger" ran a headline which seemed to be influenced by those Christmas cards painted by the limbless: "Massive Organ Draws the Crowd," it proclaimed.

Sometimes the trouble gets into the body of the story itself while the headline gets off relatively unscathed. A Tory M.P., who defied his party and constituents by voting for the Bill liberalizing the laws on homosexuality, proudly told the press that he'd followed his conscience even though he knew he "was endangering his seat." An "Evening Standard" story told of a judge in a divorce case who castigated the husband "for intercepting the wife's correspondence and searching her drawers." Unspeakable perversions were hinted at an "Oxford Mail" account of a certain Miss Giavollela's difficulties with the law. She "pleaded guilty to stealing goods from a supermarket, to assaulting a policewoman and to dishonestly handling a garden gnome," an aberration which even Krafft-Ebing seems to have overlooked.

I hope she got what she deserved. Our garden ornaments ought to be able to carry out their functions without being subjected to this sort of thing. I have every sympathy, however, for the unfortunate subject of a "Post Mercury" headline: "Antique Dealer Thought Girl Was Older." Some allowance should have been made for what, after all, is an occupational disease.

I'm not alone in having this sort of mental strabismus. The B.B.C. was practically obsessed with keeping out double-entendres, though of course that was before Auntie loosened her stays and Ken Tynan was allowed to broadcast that word. During the Abdication crisis in 1936, they went so far as to forbid Ambrose's Orchestra to play "No Regrets," "I Don't Want to Get Hot" and "We Go Well Together." The Beeb even imposed a general ban on the number "Front Page News."

THERE IS ANOTHER stage in the ambiguity game, however, which tends to affect people who suffer from too much exposure to the printed word. Apparently, the mind can only take so much and when saturation point is reached it begins to produce its own versions of perfectly innocent print.

Carlyle once caustically dismissed the work of William Bell Scott, published as "Poems of a Painter," because he was under the impression that the title of the book was "Poems of a Printer."

I reached this point long ago and, nowadays, whenever I read a wedding invitation I'm convinced it says "Mr. and Mrs. - - request the honour of your presents at the marriage of their daughter..." Not long ago I saw an ad offering a beach bungalow for rent and was convinced that its advantages included a "sea-through lounge," while the personal columns of "The Times" are full of adventurous young men offering themselves for employment with, it always seems to me, the qualification "anything awful considered."

It was something of a relief, to learn that Katherine Whitehorn, the "Observer" columnist, suffers from the same condition, which she calls "Misprint Eyes" and, incorrectly I believe, ascribes to the myopia of middle-age.

She claims she misread a headline as "Move to Beautify Cardinal" and thought that the prelate was to be given the old eye-shadow and foundation cream treatment. Things got worse and she began to see things like "Secret Plans to Reorganise Ducks" and "The Feeling to Start Soon in Hampstead" (when a tree-felling programme was announced)

Even the movie "The List of Adrian Messenger" made her suppose that it was about a chap whose ballast had shifted and who leaned dangerously to one side. Sometimes her disability is a positive advantage, supplying her with neologisms like "Sinuendo" and "Freudulent," and lately an alarming situation has developed — her hearing has become affected as well. Recently she overheard someone saying, "But it takes so long to get an ac mended" and it took her some t to realise that what had actu been meant was "to get an amended."

It won't be long before I'm in t same boat. Even if I avoid the n headlines and stories, the adv tisements are lying in wait for and who can resist the Classifie

Look what I'm up again "Unbeatable trouser bargain "Foam rubber cushions at ro bottom prices;" "The self-g wench" (this time it was the pap fault, they missed the "r" out "wrench"); "Girls ready to w clothing;" and the pathetic p "Please Help Our Nurses Home.

Even if you skip the ads there signs everywhere, like the notice Dublin launderette: "Please rem your clothes as soon as all the lig are out." A notice in Richm became notorious for its sh callousness: "This WC is closed repairs. Nearest convenience Barnes Pond."

The ways of commerce are w drous strange. What is one to mak this London shop-sign: "Page Maternity Wear"?

SOMETIMES, however, the wh process goes into reverse ge While I was in England recently kept seeing signs headed "Po notice" requesting people not to p next to driveways. I commented this to a friend, pointing it out a good example of the traditional g manners of the English. "Not at a I was told. "People put them up h ing they'll be misread as 'Pol notice.'"
